Cream of Wheat Case Doesn't Show Company Protecting Retailers' Profit, for It Apparently Doesn't Believe in Retailers' Profit

So Says a New York Contributor in Discussing the Great A. & P. Tea Co.'s Suit Against the Above Company. Says That If the Tea Co. Had Sold Cream of Wheat at Fourteen Cents, Which Was Satisfactory to the Manufacturer, the Gross Profit Would Have Been Less Than Eleven Per Cent.

When the Cream of Wheat Co. declined to sell the Atlantic & Pacific Tea Co. the news was published in the trade papers of the country with more or less prominence, but generally with approval of its action. Inasmuch as the Cream of Wheat Co. has never provided an adequate margin for the retailer, it seems strange to me that publishers gave it such prominence and I wrote to several publishers about it. One answered me as follows:—

The only reason the papers gave the Cream of Wheat Co. so much prominence was because it was a matter of news, cream of wheat being about the largest sold cereal.

Scarcely any of the cereals pay the retailer a satisfactory profit, and yet for some reason I have never been able to understand, many of the smaller grocers seem to display cereals conspicuously in their stores and thus help to educate the public to buy unprofitable merchandise. If I had a store, nearly all cereals, and I think all flour, would be kept in a back room where customers couldn't see it. If grocers generally could ever be taught that the display of profitable merchandise is about their greatest need, a great change would take place, and the business would become profitable.

As it is, grocers are advertising unprofitable goods by displaying them in their stores and windows.

Inclosed is an editorial about a department store which lost $110,000 the year before it failed because it displayed unprofitable merchandise. The new management, displaying profitable stuff, made a net profit of $41,000 the first three months.

If the trade papers of this country could educate retailers generally to this idea, the grocery business would be far more successful than it is now, with a large proportion of the retailers actually displaying unprofitable stuff, and influencing people to buy it.

Now it is true that grocers do display unprofitable goods, but it seems to me that the chief mission of the trade paper should be to educate grocers to display profitable goods and one way that this can be accomplished is through refraining from endorsing a product which is forced across without any regard for the retailer.

The Cream of Wheat decision really is not an endorsement of the maintained price idea. In substance, it is simply a reiteration of the well established principle that a merchant or any other can sell or refuse to sell anybody without assigning any reason for his action, so long as his product does not monopolize the market.

Let us first examine what Cream of Wheat is. I quote from the decision of the court:—

"Middlings" is the coarse flour and fine bran separated by bolting from fine flour and coarse bran. These middlings defendant (Cream of Wheat Co.) "selects," a selection depending upon the grade and kind of wheat used by the miller, and then purifies or cleanses such selection. The result is cream of wheat, which is no more than purified middlings. It is not patented, any one can make it who can get middlings, and the amount of that annually required by the business of the defendant is less than 1 per cent. of the amount thereof produced in the same period by the millers of the United States.

The substantial truth is that defendant's business consists in lawfully monopolizing a trade name, and impressing the public with the purity, reliability and uniformity of the very common substance it sells under that cleverly chosen name. The selection of the name was quite as important as the selection of the middlings, when business began, and after so much advertising the name or brand is by long odds the most important element in the business.

We used to sell middlings for from $14 to $21 per ton at retail. Wheat is high now and therefore middlings is quoted at $35 to $38 per ton. This figures about 1 3/4 cents per pound. Let us call it 2 cents per pound to allow for the cost of the "purification," which I believe consists in evaporating about 30 per cent. of the moisture. The Cream of Wheat Co. packs the middlings and then sells it at about 6 1/2 cents per pound in carload lots. So much for the product itself and the margin, which is very much greater when middlings is on a normal basis of cost.

Since Cream of Wheat Co. thus makes a gross margin of 77.77 per cent. in car lots there should seem to be plenty of room to allow a modest margin to the retailer—say 20 per cent. As a matter of fact the margin is 16 2/3 per cent. when Cream of Wheat is sold at 15 cents a package. But the Cream of Wheat Co. only wanted the A. & P. people to ask 14 cents a package and if the A. & P. Co. had been willing to sell at not less than 14 cents, the Cream of Wheat people would have continued to supply them in carload lots at carload prices. And 14 cents would have provided what margin for the retail grocer? It would have provided just about 10 2/3 per cent.

There is one novel feature in this decision—novel and valuable. For the first time a court has told the world at large that there is a tangible value to the public in a trademark, a brand, in that such brand insures to the public a certain definite article and service. It is ironical, considering what I have shown about prices and retailers' margins, that Cream of Wheat should be the immediate beneficiary of the valuable points in this decision. Also, it seems odd to me that it should have been accorded much free publicity with such universal praise for "protecting the retailers' profits." In the case of Cream of Wheat, the protection of the retailers' profits has always been a joke. Surely, it is laugh!

I am writing without any feeling against the Cream of Wheat Co. Perhaps they are entitled to some admiration for their ability to override the retailer and put their product successfully on the market while retaining practically all the value for themselves.

Various Views on the Problem Proposed By E. G. Wenger

Replying to the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World's" Request That Its Subscribers Say Whether E. G. Wenger of Chambersburg, Pa., Did Right to Let a Customer Go Rather Than Give Him Overmeasure, are the Following Letters.

In the last issue Mr. E. G. Wenger, of Chambersburg, Pa., described how he lost a customer and asked us to say whether he did right. It seems that the customer ordered four quarts of vinegar put in a jug that held slightly more than a gallon. He got four quarts of course but complained that he was getting short weight because when he "bought whisky in that jug, it was also filled up." Mr. Wenger proved to him that he was getting full measure, but it did not satisfy him and he paid his bill and left. Mr. Wenger asked us to say if he did right, and we in turn asked our subscribers to say. Following are some of the answers received during the week and we hope to present others:—

By F. K. Mattern, Warriorsmark, Pa.

My solution to Mr. Wenger's trouble would have been this: After the customer refused to take my measure as correct, I would have had him go out and borrow or buy a standard measure (I pay for it and have him watch me measure or measure the vinegar himself. If not satisfied then I should have let him go.

By James V. Daly, Nanticoke, Pa.

In your last issue Mr. E. L. Wenger propounds a question that all grocers have to face, or dread nearly every day. All kinds of containers are sent to the store for vinegar, including the five-quart whisky jug, that staggers and falls down when the acid vinegar test is applied.

I also had a customer who paid up when the bill was good and he was enough, and I noticed that an order for a gallon of vinegar was always

We are spending $160,000 to increase our business by first increasing yours.

By means of a big, convincing, comprehensive campaign we are teaching the housewives of America to buy from you more California Raisin Bread and more Sun-Maid Raisins. Wholesale bakers also are going to advertise this bread. They will advertise your package goods because they will advertise Sun-Maid Raisins.

This selling campaign is just being started. You have seen the first full-page advertisement in The Saturday Evening Post and The Ladies' Home Journal. Others will follow throughout the fall and winter. Altogether nine full pages will appear this season in The Saturday Evening Post and two full pages and two half pages in The Ladies' Home Journal.

And this is just the national part of the campaign, consuming only a minor part of the sum we are spending to make people buy a profitable specialty from you. Our local promotion work will help you specifically in your sales of raisins and raisin bread.

How To Get Maximum Results

This campaign of ours will make some money for you anyway—whether you identify yourself definitely with it or not. But it will help you much more if you sell raisin bread made according to our prize recipe so that your product can be known as "California Raisin Bread, made with Sun-Maid Raisins."

California Raisin Bread, made with Sun-Maid Raisins, is so delicious that it advertises itself—and it Advertisises Sun-Maid package raisins as well.

sent in her own jug. It is customary to fill a gallon jug direct from the barrel, but this particular jug contained such a jag when full that this happened. Her sister-in-law sent that identical jug for a gallon of vinegar and she received four quarts by measure in one of our containers. We sent the empty five-quart jug back to where it belonged, with explanations which were accepted by the owner of the five-quart jug, but not by the four-quart customer. We later on lost her trade, which was not worth having, as our books carry a balance against her. This is only one of the little things that test the honesty of a customer. I think Mr. Wenger should have "ducked" and shouldered the mess on one of his clerks who was gifted with the saving grace of humor and let him fix things, if he was honest, or was a collectible customer.

By F. W. Meddaugh, Elmira, N. Y.

If this customer was in the habit of kicking and finding fault with weights and measures, treat him as Mr. Wenger did. Show him that he got full measure and let him go, but if it was the first time he had complained I would have filled his jug and made him think I was as liberal as a whisky dealer. At the most it would only cost me one or two cents and the chances are there would be no more complaints. I would also explain to him that all my weights and measures were sealed by the city sealer.

California holders feel rather jubilant and independent and will certainly serve to keep prices up during the entire season. The Associated Company will offer no more seedless raisins, either natural or bleached, at present. Several independent packers have also withdrawn from the market.

The trade take considerable interest in the announcement made during the week by the General Chemical Company, of this city, that it has patented a baking powder which it will market under the name of "Ryzon." The company expects to use some new merchandizing principles in its marketing of this baking powder, and makes the following interesting statement of its views and intentions:

Co-operation between the producing advertiser and the distributor, in serving the public for mutual benefit, is more in the public interest and creates more real competition for the approval and patronage of the public than an attempt to place the burden of speculation and competition upon the retailer or middleman, whose legitimate function is to sell and distribute those articles most needful and desired by the public.

We believe the good family grocer (and the jobber who serves him) is here to stay, that he performs a genuine service to the community, from which he is entitled to a fair compensation, and we desire to co-operate with him for mutual benefit of all concerned.

SUMMARIZED MARKET CONDITIONS.

Tea quiet; unchanged. Low grade Ceylons neglected.—Coffee slightly firmer for the week and grades of Rio and Santos quotable at a shade higher. Reduced receipts in Brazil and somewhat better demand are responsible. Other coffees unchanged.—Sugar demoralized on reported cuts by refiners. Raws somewhat steadier.—Canned tomatoes firm and maintained at the previous advance. Pack look small. Other canned goods unchanged.—Prunes firm and comparatively high. Seedless raisins all firm owing to withdrawals of offerings from the coast. Other dried fruits unchanged and quiet.—Prvisions weak and inclined to be easy.—Wheat fluctuating but inclined to be easy on Government report of large yield.—Flour about unchanged, with heavy demand for export. Tendency easy rather than strong, though there is no pronounced weakness.

The New York Letter

Specialty Manufacturers Said to Have Decided Not to Grant Further Discounts to Philadelphia Jobbers' Co-operative Organization. Foreigners Buy Half Our Seedless Raisins. New Baking Powder With New Selling Plans. Market Summary.

Special Correspondence of "Modern Merchant and Grocery World."

New York, September 10, 1915.

The "New York Journal of Commerce" during the week published an interesting statement about a dinner which it said twenty-five of the leading specialty manufacturers, doing business in the New York and Philadelphia territory, held at a hotel in this city. The purpose was to decide what they would do if the recently organized Philadelphia Jobbers' Co-operative Buying Organization attempts to enforce its demand for an extra 5 per cent. It was reported that the Philadelphia jobbers' organization had also asked the specialty manufacturers to withdraw their salesmen, the idea being that if the jobbers are giving the extra 5 per cent. their salesmen will do the work which the specialty salesmen have heretofore done. According to the "Journal of Commerce," the manufacturers unanimously decided not to grant the extra 5 per cent. or withdraw their salesmen.

Some of the manufacturers claim that they were already paying the jobbers as much as 17 per cent. for distributing their goods and almost all of them were paying more than 10 per cent.

The old story of establishing a combination of manufacturers' distributive service warehouse in Philadelphia was revived. Its purpose is to give the manufacturers a general warehouse from which they can distribute their goods to retailers on orders obtained by their own salesmen, without going through the jobber at all.

The sugar refiners have begun to fight among themselves during the week, and in consequence granulated dropped to 5.30. Business is decidedly demoralized and the situation is not improved by the fact that American beet granulated is being offered as low as 5.20. The cutting among the refiners is general, having been started by the American, followed by the Federal, who later to meet further reductions by the other refiners dropped to 5.30.

Advices received here from California during the week tell the interesting story that England and Europe had already bought about 50 per cent. of the seedless raisin crop of California. The information is that foreign, European and British countries have been prevented by the Turkish blockade from obtaining Asiatic raisins and have therefore had to turn to California to buy stocks for their current needs. This tends to make the

Using Advertising As a Lever to Push Up Sales

Increasing Advertising Instead of Decreasing It When Sales Fall Off. The Souvenir Card Stunt and a Clever Calendar Thought.

Advertising. I am going to put down $\frac{1}{2}$ of 1 per cent. on sales for advertising or \$150 per year. The reason I put it that way is because I think it a good plan to appropriate a certain amount for advertising every year. I think you will probably spend it more judiciously and get more advertising value out of it than if you advertise without any idea of what it is costing you during the year; $\frac{1}{2}$ of 1 per cent. I don't believe is enough. When my sales fall down from what they were the year before I increase my advertising appropriation the next year, and then if they come up and stay there, I let the appropriation stay there. It is a good thing to have your sales right before you at the time and increase your advertising as the sales fall down. If you watch you should be able to use it as a lever and boost your sales back to where they belong.

Some merchants may say, "I don't need to advertise. I have been in this town for about thirty years." I would rather deal with the fellow who advertises and who is going to be here for the next thirty years. I would rather deal with a man who is a "comer" than a "has been." How many of you men who go away ever send any souvenir post cards back to your customers? Just think of the possibilities of that thing. Suppose John Jones is a customer of mine and I write Jones, "I am having a good time in ———. I will be home next week to see you about some stuff." He gets the card and says, that is mighty kind of Johnson to think of me while he is away; and the next day so after you come home he will be in. There is one thing you want to be careful about. You don't want to send a post card to the man living on one side of the road, and not send a post card to the man living on the other side, because the mail boxes are right close to each other. The one little girl comes out and says, "We got a post card from Mr. Johnson in ———." It ought to have that effect. Every man, woman and child ought to be proud to think that you remembered them. The other little girl does not find a card. She goes back to the house and says, "Mr. Johnson wrote to that other family and did not write to us."

Calendars used to be a bug bear. I used to hate to buy them and hate to give them. Everyone who came to the store wanted the best one. We solved that problem by going after the women and their curiosity. We sent out cards, say the 1st of December, saying, "We will give a calendar of merit to any woman who will come in and answer one question." That arouses her curiosity. She comes into the store and says, "What is that question you want me to answer?" Question? "Yes," she answers, and gets out her card. Oh, yes, what article in the store would she like most for Christmas? These cards have to be brought back by the 10th. I have lots of things that ought to be turned into Christmas presents. After she has said what she preferred, the next day her husband comes in, and my boy in the store says, "Your wife was in yesterday, and she wants so-and-so for Christmas." He is a mighty poor husband if he doesn't buy it. You can work on it and sell it next year if you don't sell it before Christmas.

WITH THE EDITOR

Retailers ought to rally to the support of the California Associated Raisin Co.

Taking Up With Raisin Advertising.

and help it all they can, for its present campaign will directly bring business to retail stores. The Raisin Co. is spending $160,000 advertising to consumers that they should eat more raisin products. I have always been skeptical as to the value of campaigns like this, but the California orange campaign sold oranges, so that there is hardly any room for doubt that the raisin campaign will sell raisins. And every pound it sells will be sold through some retail store. Retailers are surprisingly slow to recognize this, when such a campaign comes up. They talk about "not going to butter another man's bread," and all that sort of thing, evidently missing what is right before their eyes, viz., that they are buttering their own bread, too.

Every retailer who sells raisins ought to yoke up at once with the Raisin Co.'s advertising. It is advertising for goods he sells and will help him sell them.

newly formed "United Grocers' Association," inspires some reflections upon one phase of the modern co-operative buying enterprise among retailers with which manufacturers will have to reckon, sooner or later. I mean packing goods under co-operative private brands and having members push them. The alluring story told the retailer is that he gets both the retail and the manufacturing profit; he is absolutely secure from cutters —on that merchandise at least—for only members can buy the co-operative brands, for which co-operative advertising and co-operative pushing insure a demand.

This new English co-operative concern is doing this, and several American concerns, among which, however, are none of the largest as yet. The Girard Grocery Co., of Philadelphia, tried it several years ago, I think on soap, but it did not succeed very well. The proper co-operation was not forthcoming from members.

Suppose a co-operative organization composed of a thousand members decided to pack a brand of laundry soap which they could afford to sell at 4 cents and make a profit. Under heavy competition, other laundry soaps were selling all around at 4 cents, without a profit. The thousand pack their soap and stock it. Could they sell it, in face of the tremendous competition in soaps? Undoubtedly, the right kind of men, with their heart in their work, could sell it. Naturally it would be strenuous work, but no more strenuous than the problems salesmanship has met and solved before.

The trouble is that you cannot seem to get "the right kind of men, with their heart in their work," behind these movements. You can get some, but out of a thousand, a staggering percentage will be those who move in the line of least resistance, and who would prefer to fill an unsolicited order for advertised soap at 4 cents, which is about cost, to working up business for their own soap at 5, which would pay a good profit. There is much excuse. There are so many articles to sell, so much to do in a day, so much expense to be earned, that it is not to be wondered at that a retailer doesn't always incline to the task of independent salesmanship. The fact that he does not, and that many can not, is the strongest weapon that a manufacturer has.

The writer of the following letter did not write it for publication, but we feel certain

he will not object to its being published, particularly as his name and address are withheld, and he has been given an answer by mail. I do not intend to answer the letter here, but will only point out one or two precautions which it shows might well be taken by merchants generally:—

In May, 1914, an agent called on me representing "Leslie's Weekly" and wanted me to subscribe for a year. He offered free a business guide and a world atlas. I at first didn't care to subscribe for it, but when he made me a price of $3 for cash in advance and offered me that business guide and a large atlas free, I did subscribe. He wrote the contract on their regular contract and I bargained with him to pay him $1 in advance and the remaining $2 upon delivery of the books. I was to receive them in two weeks. After this time was up and I heard nothing from that company, I wrote to them in regard to the magazine and books, which I didn't receive. I received a letter from them stating that they had no record of my order and asking me to send them the receipt which I held for the payment made to the agent.

I mailed them the receipt and in a week I received the business guide, also a small atlas (the contract called for a large atlas). I immediately returned them the small atlas, stating the reason, and asked them to send me the large atlas. This I have not received as yet. In a month they sent their collector around to collect 50 cents a month, so I refused to pay them anything and asked them to live up to their contract written by their agent. I also had the paper stopped. Now they are trying to collect from me $4.50 (the contract called for $3) and have placed that account with their attorney. I am inclosing you one of their letters. I will thank you if you will advise me what to do.

Every day some retailer finds himself in a dispute like this over the fact that he has been given contract by some salesman which that salesman's employer refuses to carry out. It seems that the world is full of crooked salesmen, judging by the many incidents one hears wherein, to get orders, they have done crooked things. I believe that any retailer would do well to make and keep the following rules:—

1.—Never to sign any contract which has not been thoroughly read, digested and, if any part is cloudy, explained by somebody in position to speak with authority.

2.—Never to sign a contract for anything, unless an exact copy is left with him.

3.—Never to pay money under any circumstances to a stranger, salesman whom he does not know is all right.

4.—Never to pay in advance for anything which is to be furnished by a strange and unknown house, but when payment is to be made in advance, to make it to the house and not to the salesman, unless the letter is known.

The Pennsylvania State Convention

During the past week the annual convention of the Pennsylvania Retail Merchants' Association has been meeting in Conneaut Lake, Pa. The "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" had a reporter present and will, as usual, present a stenographic report of the sessions as soon as it is received.

This Will Probably Affect the United States.

One of the largest Canadian producers states that, apart from small quantities being held by manufacturers for their own customers, there is no maple sugar to be had in the Dominion. This state of affairs was realized only a short time ago, when American buyers visited those who had a few carloads and bought them out at a comparatively high price. The present scarcity is attributed, first, to the operation of the pure food law, and, second, to the small crop. A dealer in Western Canada wrote to a Quebec firm for four barrels of maple sugar and received a reply to the following effect:—

conditions. The crop this year, as you are probably aware, did not amount to much more than a third of what it was a year ago. The demand for the soldiers at the front has had a tendency to make it even scarcer. At present we do not know where to buy it, and are asking 12 cents per pound for what we have in stock. We were nearly cleaned out, but have retained a small amount for the benefit of our old customers, and are able to offer you four barrels at the above price. We do not expect you will be able to buy at less than 15 cents in a short time. Wire to us whether to ship at this figure.

The effect of the pure food legislation recently introduced has been to put a lot of the black maple sugar, made under more or less primitive surroundings by the farmers, off the market.

ter much of this sugar had been discarded by the Canadian Government, many farmers, feeling the pinch, explained to the Quebec provincial government. Another effect of the law has been to cut down considerably the number of manufacturers, especially those who were making a compound or mixture. Much of the inferior maple sugar made by the farmers of Quebec under the old conditions was bought by manufacturers of tobacco, candy, etc., and with a new standard in force, a small crop, and many of the farmers unprepared to turn out sugar of standard demand for the better class product, resulting in the present scarcity. On May 1, 1916, the duty of 3 cents per pound on maple sugar and syrup imported into the United States will be removed. Canadian manufacturers confidently expect that this will mean a bigger demand from the States, and preparations are being made to increase the output next year.

We would be pleased to have for publication in this column the ideas of our readers upon trade topics, being understood that we do not hold ourselves responsible for any views expressed therein. All communications must be accompanied by the writer's name and address as an evidence of good faith, but not necessarily for publication. All inquiries within our power to answer will also be noticed in this department.

Cost of Doing a Cash Business.

Dunkirk, N. Y., Sept. 7, 1915.
The Editor.

Dear Sir:—Please inform me through your valuable paper what percent it costs to do a strictly grocery business, no delivering and no telephones?

Yours respectfully,
JNO. E. WIRTNER.

Naturally this depends on factors which vary very greatly with different stores. We believe a fair average cost of doing business where sales are for cash, and there is no delivery and no telephones, would be around 12½ per cent., although if conditions were especially favorable and the business large, we believe it could be reduced to 10 per cent.

Some Coffee Questions.

Trenton, N. J., Sept. 6, 1915.
To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—Will you kindly inform me as to the place where both Java and Mocha coffee, offered for sale in the United States, are grown?

My belief is that Java coffee must be grown on the Isle of Java, and Mocha in Arabia, and that unless this is true none of either variety can enter this country under either name. Also in naming a blend Java and Mocha, must it not contain over 50 per cent. of Java, and if the name be reversed, must it not contain over 50 per cent. of Mocha?

The answer will be appreciated.

Yours very truly,
JOHN M. ODENWELDER.

Java coffee comes from the island of Java, which is one of the islands of the Dutch East Indies, and no coffee not grown there can be sold as Java in this country.

Mocha coffee, that is, the best of it, comes from the Arabian province of Yemen. Other Mocha coffee comes from other Arabian provinces, but none, rather strangely, comes from Mocha itself.

To call a coffee "Java and Mocha" no other coffee except Java and Mocha could enter into it. If it is all composed of Java

Do You Sell Wheatena People?

Every grocer doesn't sell Wheatena—that's better for you than if everybody sold it.

The grocer who caters to the very cheapest people often doesn't sell it because Wheatena is usually used by a different class of people. Wheatena is distinctively a genteel food, not because we intended it for any special class in the beginning, but because it seemed to find its own niches.

Wheatena is the hearts of selected wheat, unusually packed and unusually guaranteed.

A Training School for Collection Agencies.

Arendtsville, Pa., Sept. 6, 1915.
To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—As subscribers to your journal, we are writing to find out what you can tell us about the American Collection Service, Mr. W. A. Shryer, president, Detroit, Mich. They are a company who start young men in the collection business. I have a son who is anxious to try out their lessons and take up that study. Are they reliable, and do you think the course worth price asked as a special inducement for September—$20 cash, regular price $40. They have been corresponding with us for some time. Tell us your candid opinion, if you will, please. We are inclosing stamp for your kind answer. Maybe you can also tell us what Dun and Bradstreet have to say about them. We shall consider it quite a favor if you will give us any light on the subject.

Yours truly,
H. W. TROSTEL & SON.

To begin with, there is no greater fraud than the collection agency business. We do not believe that a collection agency can be conducted honestly and survive, which is probably the reason why almost none of them are conducted honestly. Collectible accounts, on which they can make a commission, are hard to find, because retailers naturally only turn over what they can't collect themselves. That means that try as they may, the commissions they will actually earn will not support them. They are therefore compelled to charge "retaining fees," which are seldom really earned, or by various subterfuges eat up by overcharges what little they collect, or hang on to it for weeks and months.

We should not advise any honest man to go into the collection agency business, and we should certainly never pay to be initiated into it.

Of the concern named we know nothing except that it has been an advertiser for a considerable period. We advise not investing. Not only for the above reason, but also because there are no secrets in the collection agency business. Anybody with common sense can start one.

More Arguments Against the Stevens Bill Answered.

New York, Sept. 6, 1915.
To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—Mr. Jason Rogers, publisher of the New York "Globe," is sending to newspaper editors and publishers throughout the country, under the heading "Protect Your Own Business Interests By Helping Defeat Legislation," a letter with an enclosure entitled "Ten Out Of A Hundred

Both letter and enclosure are full of misstatement and seek to create the impression that all department stores are opposed to the standard price principle; as a matter of fact, many department stores of the highest class are actively supporting the Stevens bill and are members of the American Fair Trade League; the "Modern Retailer," which goes monthly to merchants of the United States, announces, in its current issue, that the answers to its country wide inquiry show that "80 per cent. of the retailers in all lines favor price maintenance."

The list of "points" inclosed in Mr. Rogers' letter, entitled "Ten Out Of A Hundred Evils Of Maintained Prices," is all mere assertion without proofs or authorities; it can only result in involving in difficulties editors who use it; we but briefly reply to each point:—

1. "Maintained prices would prohibit low retail price opportunities to the families who would economize."

Nothing of the sort. Price cutters of standard articles necessarily reimburse themselves by overcharging on unbranded and unknown wares, and families who patronize them are victimized; merchants, to exist, must maintain an adequate average of profit.

2. "Maintained prices would encourage every manufacturer to brand his goods and create a big demand for his product, and then increase the retail price."

Absolutely contradicted by the trade fact that on no price-maintained standard product has the price been raised; on the contrary on all such goods the manufacture is giving to-day more and more for the money as competition among manufacturers in quality increases. For instance, a package of Kellogg's Toasted Corn Flakes is one half larger and one-third less in price than it was 10 years ago.

3. "Maintained prices would encourage trusts, as the large and wealthy manufacturer only can afford to take advantage of his privileges under this bill by forcing the demand and holding up prices."

The only comment necessary is to paraphrase this to read: Price cutting encourages trusts, as the large and wealthy retailer only can afford to take advantage of his opportunity to prey upon the public by advertising well-known "leaders" and persuading them to buy inferior substitutes.

4. "Maintained prices would prevent legitimate competition of the small manufacturers who cannot engage in a business against the large manufacturers who have created a demand for their brands by long-continued and expensive advertising campaigns."

Wholly disproved by actual experience in every line of production. It is only necessary to indicate a few in which maintained prices have greatly encouraged competition between manufacturers; the safety razor business, the cereal business, the underwear business, the automobile business, etc., etc.

5. "Maintained prices would increase the cost of living, because the large manufacturer, having choked out competition, will raise his retail price, the consumer being, as in the case of other trusts (Standard Oil), made to stand the burden."

The Week's One-Time Ads.

That's one whacking big ad. the Ferris Ham and Bacon people have in this week, ain't it? Four pages and a half! They sure believe some in advertising, and why shouldn't they—they have the goods. If you lay down this week's paper without reading that ad., don't ever ask me to eat dinner with you again, for I won't do it. I've no use for any man that so far forgets himself as not to read something that'll do him the good this will. The talk in the ad. this week is about advertising—about the kind of advertising that pays. Strong meat in every line—good stuff for any business man that either advertises himself, or reads other people's advertising. Something about cutting prices, too—read what he says about his cut-price overcoats—how certain firms actually teach people to buy from them only at a cut price. Read that twice, if you think cutting's a good thing. The Ferris people are so bent on helping and interesting people, through these ads., that they most forget to say anything about Ferris Hams and Bacon. But I ain't going to forget to. I'm here for the purpose of saying that any grocer who wants a grade of ham and bacon that will always suit biggest kickers, ought to go to the question of Ferris Hams and Bacon. They cost a bit more, my, my, how everybody does 'em!

I want you to stop what you're doing right away—even if it's making money—and turn over until you find the ad. of the Grant Egg Candler. I've seen some slick idlers, but as a time and money-saver it goes the limit. It's an egg candler that any retailer can use, it doesn't need any dark room, that you don't have to use one at a time with. You can spot a poor egg in a second with it, and goes even further than that—you can grade eggs on their quality you want to sell them that way. Any grocer with a Grant Egg Candler can guarantee every egg he sells and he'll never have to make good on any bad ones unless customers sit on 'em and fuddle up. Now do what I tell you to do now—turn over and look at that ad. and then write for their book telling all about the thing.

Also let us paraphrase this, so to read: Price cutting will increase the cost of living, because the large retailer, having choked competition, will raise his retail price, the consumer being, as in the case of other trusts, made to stand the burden.

8. "Maintained prices would prevent important seasonal reductions in prices upon which most housewives depend—especially those of limited means."

9. "Maintained prices, as legalized in the Stevens Bill, will do nothing of the sort; the Stevens Bill expressly provides that in case of deteriorated goods, the dealer may sell them at any price he chooses, provided he has first given the manufacturer an opportunity to take them off his hands at what they cost him."

10. "Maintained prices would prevent individual initiative, as it eliminates the independence of the retailer and would practically turn every retail store into a sort of a magnified slot machine."

The unanimous opinion of the Supreme Court of Washington in the case of the Fisher Flouring Mills Co. vs. C. A. Swanson completely demolishes any such argument. The court said: "The true competition is between rival articles, a competition in excellence, which can never be maintained if, through the perfidy of the retailer, he cuts prices for his own ulterior purposes, the manufacturer is forced to compete in prices with goods of his own production, while the retailer recoups his losses on the cut prices by the sale of other articles at, or above, their reasonable price. It is a fallacy to assume that the price cutter pockets a loss. The public makes it up on other purchases. The manufacturer alone is injured, except as the public is also injured through the manufacturer's inability, in the face of cut prices, to maintain the excellence of his product. Fixing the price on all brands of high-grade flour is a very different thing from fixing the price on one brand of high-grade flour. The one means destruction of all competition and of all incentive to increased excellence. The other means heightened competition and intensified incentive to increased excellence. It will not do to say that the manufacturer has not interests to protect by contract in the goods after he has sold them. They are personally identified and morally guaranteed by his mark and his advertisement."

8. "This is a campaign to increase retail costs and lower wages, to ruin many retailers, to choke competition by other manufacturers, to make possible inordinate profits for the few manufacturers by this class of legislation at the expense of the public and others affected."

This would seem to have been fully answered in foregoing comment.

9. "Maintained prices place the control of all retail business in the hands of the manufacturer, although he has no financial risk or equity in the business."

On this point the Supreme Court of the State of Washington, in the case already referred to, is pertinent and conclusive in recognition of the manufacturer's interest in the reputation of his product. The court said: "It is a fallacy to assume that the price cutter pockets the loss. The public makes it up on other purchases. It will not do to say that the manufacturer has not interests to protect by contract in the goods after he has sold them. They are personally identified and morally guaranteed by his mark and his advertisement."

Philadelphia, Pa.,

September 9, 1915.

To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—In the August 30th issue of "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" there is an interesting article on "How To Sell and How Not to Sell Goods by Telephone."

Here in this organization there has been established a Service Promotion Bureau, the object of which is to help subscribers weave the a telephone into their selling methods, with a view of increasing their net profits at a decreased selling cost. It is possible that this bureau might prove of some practical value to your publication, the object of which is to help your subscribers improve upon their methods of doing business as merchants and grocers.

This office, therefore, is at your service in any way you may desire, and from our experience in the telephone business we may be able to devise ways and means for increasing business of the readers of this publication.

Very truly yours,

Here Is a Co-operative Buying Organization That We Might Learn Something From

Description of a New English Plan That Proposes to Put Its Best Work on Packing Private Brands Which Will Sell at Fixed and Protected Prices. Several Co-operative Enterprises on the Side. Sell Members at Cost Plus Two and a Half Per Cent.

London, Eng., Sept. 5, 1915.

Your paper is interested in co-operative buying enterprises; perhaps its readers will be interested in the latest co-operative buying plan for retailers which has been launched here. It is called "The United Grocers' Association, Ltd.," and its headquarters are in London. It is created, according to its prospectus, "for combined buying, combined advertising, and the unification of the grocery trade."

The nominal capital of the company is £10,000, divided into 10,000 shares of £1 each, of which 8,950 shares are now offered for subscription, payable in installments.

Membership of the United Grocers' Association, Ltd., is secured by the holding of at least five shares of £1 each. No liability attaches to members beyond the number of shares taken up, apart from their complying with the terms of business as arranged by the Sales Department of the association.

The association will only supply goods to persons qualified to be members, or to limited companies in which a person qualified to be a member (or such person or his wife or children between them) hold at least 50 per cent. of the issued capital.

The primary object of the association is to assist its members by supplying them with first-class goods that will ensure a fair profit and by securing for them the best terms obtainable in regard to all goods supplied to the trade and to organize an advertising scheme which will attract customers to those shops owned by members of this association.

The association proposes to pack various goods under its own registered brands and labels, which will show quality and value not excelled elsewhere.

Every article packed by the association will be of the very best quality and carry a guarantee of absolute purity. The United Grocers' Association goods will be accurately described and the selling prices protected. Any cutting of price will give power to the association to cancel membership.

The whole of the net profits are to be utilized for the benefit of the members of this association, after paying dividend in regard to share capital, and providing for reserve and any extension of the business as the directors deem fit, then the surplus shall be divided each year in the way of bonus amongst the members of the association and in proportion to the amount of their purchases of the association specialties.

It is proposed to form at once groups of members in large towns and centers that consignments of proprietary goods may be sent at the lowest possible rate, the association arranging with the manufacturers to break up these consignments and deliver each part to respective members carriage free.

Members are not expected to purchase anything from the United Grocers' Association that they can buy better elsewhere. There are no restrictions apart from price protection and qualification.

The association will take but one member from each locality, and members must agree to stock and push goods packed by the association. All these goods are returnable if not sold.

The association will, as funds permit, open up insurance departments, employment of bureaux, engage expert window dressers and lady demonstrators, stock takers, etc., the services of whom shall be at the disposal of the members.

The association claims that it will save its members 5 per cent., nothing will be offered that does not bear out this statement.

The following statement will perhaps interest you. The association, after making investigation, found 70 per cent. of the grocers' turnover can be handled at 1¼ per cent., the remaining 30 per cent. upon those lines for which they have a gross profit of 2½ per cent. It is estimated that the gross profit provided for by the association will produce £4,225 per annum. This is based on 250 grocers placing orders of £20 per week only. Members are proposed who can handle ten times the amount. They are that putting aside £2,000 for salaries, wages, office, postage, printing, insurance and other expenses that this turnover would insure, they have a balance of £2,225, which, after providing 10 per cent. for share capital, leaves a balance of £1,225 out of which to provide for reserve and a very substantial bonus.

The association's private brands, being of the finest quality and purity always, will bear a large proportion of profit than other goods dealt in, and still further increase the net profit. This will be used for advertising the Grocers' Association goods which will be distributed in the shape of a bonus in proportion to each member's purchases of these goods.

Apart from combined buying, the association issues a monthly circular or price-list, a weekly circular and a retail price-list free of cost. The retail price-list issues four times a year in order to keep members right up to date with smart new lists instead of the old time price-lists which they were issuing spasmodically. These lists are supposed to keep the housewife regularly interested in members' shops. To insure members taking an interest in the list and distributing it with care, they print the covers with their name and address and a reproduction of their shop.

Apple Market Hurt by Poor Fruit.

Government Trying to Persuade Farmers to Throw the Poor Fruit Out. War Proves Less Harmful Than Expected to American Apple Business.

Washington, D. C., Sept. 9, 1915.

Effective co-operative organizations afford the best means for profitable marketing of the country's increasing apple crop, according to a survey of marketing conditions in the industry just published as bulletin No. 302, "Apple Market Investigations 1914-15" by the United States Department of Agriculture. In States where apples are boxed instead of barreled, growers' associations handle a large percentage of the output and in securing uniformity in the pack and advantageous distribution of the crop are much more successful than individual producers in other sections. Where individuals act independently there is little uniformity in grading and much poor fruit is shipped which, in seasons of large production such as 1914, cannot be disposed of profitably.

Observations in the Chicago market showed that 25 per cent. of the arrivals in carlot bulk, or the equivalent of 350 carloads, and 10 per cent. of the barreled shipments, the equivalent of about 160 carloads, were of such poor quality that the price would not have paid the freight charges had these apples been shipped by themselves. By throwing out this poor fruit the farmers would not only have saved the cost of packing and shipping, but would have cleared the market for their good stock. Similar conditions were found elsewhere.

In this connection it is said that the grade and package laws now in operation in a number of States are proving effective in stabilizing the market. Uniformity in State legislation of this kind, the authors state, is, however, most desirable.

The effect of the war upon the industry has been found to be less disastrous than was apprehended. Because of the cheapness of the fruit, consumption was stimulated until the exports far exceeded expectations. The German ports being closed, large quantities were shipped direct to the Scandinavian markets for the first time and this should prove of considerable benefit in future years. Direct trade with South America has also increased greatly and should continue to do so, especially if the growing trade in meat products affords additional return facilities for shipment. Careful selection, grading and packing by hand is, however, essential to the delivery of the fruit in good condition and only stock that may be classed as "Fancy" or "Extra Fancy" should be exported to South American ports. "There's a Reason"

The Grocery Markets

Sugar.

Sugar is in excellent consumptive demand, but that did not prevent refiners from reducing prices during the week. Those who had been selling granulated at 5.60 reduced it to 5.50 and those who had been selling at 5.50 reduced to 5.40. Raws are a little easier for the week.

Tea.

The tea market shows no change for the week. Everything in desirable qualities rules steady to firm and is in very fair demand. One of the very few things which is showing weakness is poor, stalky Ceylons, which rule around 24 cents in a large way. These are neglected and nobody seems to want them.

Coffee.

The coffee market shows a slight fractional improvement for the week, due to slightly better demand and some falling off in the receipts. Perhaps all grades of Rio and Santos can be quoted at an eight to a quarter cent higher than a week ago. There is still much coffee available, however, and no very high prices would appear to be possible. Milds are unchanged and quiet, as are Java and Mocha.

Syrup and Molasses.

Glucose declined again during the week 10 points, ostensibly on account of the reduction in corn, although the reduction in corn hardly warrants the total reduction in glucose. Compound syrup is unchanged for the week and quiet. Sugar syrup quiet but firm. Molasses dull and unchanged.

Fish.

No change has occurred in Norway mackerel during the week, but the undertone is slightly firmer, due to continued diminution of supplies, without any adequate means of restoring them again. The outlook for mackerel is firm. Shore and Norway fish are changed and cutting no figure. There is some disposition on the part of buyers to contract for new codfish, providing they can get concessions on the opening prices, but so far they haven't been able to do this. There is no consumptive demand for codfish as yet. Medium red salmon, chums and pinks are about 7½ cents a dozen higher than they were, but red Alaska is unchanged. The outlook for the new pack is firm. Sardines, both domestic and imported, are unchanged and quiet.

Dried Fruits.

Prunes are firm on continued inquiries from abroad. Prices in a large way f. o. b. average 3¾ for small and medium sizes with a premium for 40s. The consumptive demand for prunes is small. Peaches, apricots, raisins and currants are all unchanged and dull.

Canned Goods.

Tomatoes are still maintained at the advance noted last week. The warm weather has brought more goods out, but hasn't yet reduced prices. It is said to be too late to recover what has already been lost, and there are predictions of a pack not more than 50 per cent. of last year. If these predictions are fulfilled it unquestionably means higher prices for tomatoes. Corn and are unchanged and quiet. A dull at ruling prices. Calif canned goods unchanged and heavy. There is some talk that prices of futures do not imply some packers will not pack. Eastern staple canned goods no change and light demand.

Beans and Peas.

Domestic pea beans are a higher than a week ago and in demand. Marrows are also 10 cents per bushel higher and now quoted in a large way at per bushel. Scarcity is the rule in both cases. California have worked up possibly ten per cent. and are in fair demand. Green Scotch peas dull and unchanged.

Butter.

The butter market is active with a good consumptive demand for grades. The quality arriving averaging fancy and the outlook for unchanged prices for the few days.

Eggs.

The egg market is firm at a advance of 1 cent. The consumptive demand is very good and the

Do Women Say This to You?

"Oh, no, I don't want to bother with it—it spoils too easily."

This is the spoken or unspoken reason hundreds of women have for not using Rennet regularly in their homes. All such women will buy James T. Shinn's Liquid Rennet, for every bottle is guaranteed. We can safely guarantee it because its making is as scrupulously clean as anything can be.

We also guarantee it to do its work with milk in three to five minutes—that's another point to use with women who haven't been using rennet.

And here is the argument to use with you—Shinn's Liquid Rennet pays you 100 per cent. profit.

light. This, with the good quality of the present arrivals, makes a healthy market.

Cheese.

An active demand is reported for grades of cheese at a half cent advance. The consumptive demand is very good and the quality arrived fully equal to the standard for the season. The market is firm at present basis with no immediate change in sight.

Provisions.

Unsmoked meats are steady at unchanged prices with a good consumptive demand. Pure lard and compound are steady and unchanged with a moderate inquiry. Cured meats, dried beef and smoked meats are unchanged with a moderate demand.

INDIVIDUAL MARKET REPORTS

Imported Fish Specialties.

In writing our report last week the shipment of new Iceland herrings arrived here, and never before has the market seen herrings as fine as these, but never before has the market paid as high a price for this class of fish as it is paying just at the present moment. There is no chance, at least for the present, of seeing any better figures in the near future. Our shipment, sailing from Norway last week, will cost just as much money, and the next shipments are likely to cost even more, and the demand from buyers for herrings and all kinds of fish continues unabated.

Norway mackerel, so far, only in small lots have been offered, and at prices which practically excluded business, but it is to be hoped that when the fishing becomes more general, that prices will also be more within reach of our buyers to start importing those fish.

Not only herrings continue very scarce, but naturally the few small lots arriving are taken by eager buyers at high prices.

Norway the fishing of sardines continues quite satisfactory, and the demand from our competitors in Europe is equally strong, so that prices are entirely in sellers' favor, which makes it impossible to acquire any new lots of Norwegian sardines at the present moment, and we could not compete with lots held by importers here, and which were bought at old prices, and which, owing to American custom, are being offered at old prices. It seems to us that prices for sardines in this market must advance before long.

Our friends in Portugal cable that fish have made their appearance, and the prices now asked for the new fish make it impossible to import them at the present time. We shall have to wait until their demands are more moderate before importing any lots.

STROHMEYER & ARPE Co.
New York.

Rice.

The market shows improvement in demand and the inquiry is becoming lively. Stocks in the hands of the buyers are steadily getting into better shape, "old" gradually passing out and attracting more attention. New rice is arriving slowly and a more free market of slightly samples is in evidence. Prices are holding steady, although there has been a slight easing off from last week. It is generally believed, however, that fancy grades at the present time are on a safe and reasonable basis for operation, and are likely to be strengthened in view of the fact that the river crop is over with in 60 or 90 days, and in consequence bring a premium after that time over prices from Texas, Interior Louisiana and Arkansas.

At New Orleans the market shows some improvement and buyers are taking hold with more confidence, and in consequence prices are being well maintained. Although receipts of rough were heavy during the past few days, the tone of the market was stronger and prices for the better grades show an advance.

In the Interior, Southwest Louisiana, Texas and Arkansas, a few mills have started up, but as yet they are not strong factors in the situation.

D. TALMAGE'S SONS Co.
New York and New Orleans.

Spices.

The market continues fairly active. Spot stocks of many articles are being rapidly disposed of. Most spices are firm. The trade demand for the next two or three months will be large and supplies here at this time are plainly inadequate for the normal consumption.

Pepper.—Market somewhat firmer. Black peppers being in active request at this time. White peppers, however, are slightly easier.

Mace.—In good spot demand. While the market is unchanged, prices are steady.

Nutmegs.—In very good demand at steady prices. Supplies in our country have been heavily reduced lately.

Cassias.—All grades are unchanged. The demand is fair.

Standard Canned Goods.

With cold rainstorms almost a daily occurrence throughout the tomato belt, and the temperature frequently below 50 degrees during the last two or three weeks, continued unfavorable crop conditions are not surprising. The market situation has now resolved itself into a weather proposition, and your thermometer will be your best guide, probably for the month of September. It is a fortunate thing for the canners that the jobbers refused to buy futures this year even at the below cost prices at which they were offered up to the middle of July, otherwise there would now be a scramble among themselves to buy tomatoes to cover unprofitable contracts. As it is, they have been buying of one another this week to protect themselves against further loss on the sales which they made during July and August. Next year it may again become fashionable for the jobbers to buy futures.

The character of the buying last week indicates that the jobbers are "up against it" on the tomato proposition, so far, this season. The buying orders came from all sections of the

OUR NEW DEPARTURE IN ADVERTISING*THE SEPTEMBER LETTER—To Progressive, Experienced, Well-Principled GrocersOur Good Friends:—

Generous comments come to us on the striking Commercial Romance from the life of Alexander T. Stewart, as condensed in our August Letter. One of the proofs of his "forwardness" was his inauguration of Broadside Advertising in the Daily Papers of 1850-1870. He saw a new opportunity; he seized it. His enterprise appalled his smaller competitors. Of course, if ten of those Houses had taken his cue and quickly followed his lead, his advantage could not have been so marked. The cluster of Houses would have paid ten times as much for Advertising, to be sure, and each might have won out on the average perhaps one-tenth of what came to A. T. Stewart & Company. Would it then have paid any one of them?

• Every Merchant in our day is interested in Advertising and of ADVERTISING may we talk together now? Each Merchant who would advertise to advantage must learn the trade by going through the mill himself. Otherwise he will not know what means are adapted to his purpose or what money spent is likely to come back in the way of increased business and profits. As you know, we have been advertising generously for half a century, never firing in the dark, but using the best judgment and enterprise we could command, and ready for new opportunities and new methods. This has been costly, of course. We have charged two or three moderate fortunes to Advertising Account, and while from some ventures we have received reward doubtless half of the money might as well have been thrown off the dock, so far as profitable return was concerned.

In the last quarter of a century the soliciting and preparing of Advertising has become a profession. The Eleventh Annual Convention of Advertising Men, just closed in the West, claimed a Membership of 10,000 men. These are they who "bone" you to advertise, make your contracts, write your advertisements, and take your money. There is a deal of character and brains in that profession and perhaps fewer black sheep than in many other lines. Intelligence, Industry, Enthusiasm, Hopefulness, are earmarks of this new profession. But the lack of adequate returns to many a man who pays the money for it all, compels him to question, "Will Advertising Really Bring Increase and Profit to My Business?" The world is full of Page Ads., Display Type, Catch Phrases, Striking Illuminations, Huge Bill Boards, Pictorial Postal Cards and Letters ad nauseum, until in every home the flood of advertising matter has become one of the banes of life.

Of course, if all Advertising advertised, every Merchant who began Advertising would cling to it with the grip of grim death. He could not afford to let go. But have you noticed how often names that have become familiar to your eye in Magazines, Weeklies, Flats, Dailies, silently fold their wings and steal away; and have you figured what a shrinkage there has been in the last two or three years in the Advertising Columns and Pages of many of these Issues? Why? The answer is easy. Mere Advertising often DOES NOT PAY. This brings the question to every Merchant, "Shall I advertise at all?" "How shall I advertise to have it worth while?" For you will not mistake the Froth for the Beer. Advertising Bills take clean money out of Net Profits. Does it come back? This is the immensely practical question. We have had some startling eye-openers of late in this Big Town. Henry Siegel is serving (in spite of his flood of advertising), a term in a New York Penitentiary. The J. B. Greenhut Company, formerly Siegel-Cooper & Company who filled this part of the world with Advertising, sent a Lawyer's Deputy to our Office a few days ago asking us to compromise our account with them at 27½ cents on the dollar.

In our September Letter we are addressing perhaps 30,000 Grocers, many of whom have had wide experience in this field. We are not attempting to advise them, but we ask them to do us the favor of advising us. Won't you, therefore, our good friend, write us HOW YOU have Advertised and found it paid, and HOW YOU have Advertised and found only a Failure? You will do us a valued service in this way, and perhaps clarify your own judgment a bit. See?

SPECIAL ORDER RUGS

The highest degree of decorative excellence and luxury can be attained by the use of a Whole Carpet, woven in a single piece without seams, in any shape, size, pattern and coloring.

We make such Floor Coverings to special order at reasonable prices in a variety of fine imported weaves—French Aubusson and Savonnerie, Scotch Chenille Axminster, English Hand-tufted, Berlin, India and Turkey, as well as in excellent domestic grades.

Sketches prepared and samples submitted upon request. Orders should be placed as far as possible in advance of the delivery required.

FIFTH AVENUE & 47TH STREET, NEW YORK

In the meantime we have been using our shears on some of the Issues that come to our desk; it is easy to sort ads. into general classes. Here for instance, is the advertisement of no doubt The Leading Carpet and Rug House of the Country. Notice how concise and direct it is and how it appeals to the reader who wishes to buy Carpets, Rugs, etc., of the quality, style and value that will be worth while and a joy. And there it stops. If you want such floor covering you decide you will go to Sloane's and see their stock, for the tone of this Sloane ad. commands your attention and confidence. Is this "Worth While Advertising" for the Sloanes?

IN WRITING TO ADVERTISERS KINDLY MENTION "MODERN MERCHANT AND GROCERY WORLD"

Many of the ads. of B. Altman & Company, probably "The Leading General Dry Goods Establishment" here now, are of the same high grade. See in their display, reference is made to prices, to be sure, but not appealing first of all, to the cupidity of the buyer. If you want style, quality, up-to-date material and coloring, will not the Altman Store attract you and is this "Worth While Advertising" for Altman's.

Speaking of direct presentation, how in this illustration the word "PLYMOUTH" takes your eye? We do not indorse the Gin, but the ad. tells a simple story and stops. "Plymouth Gin" may go to the right spot, but you notice the Advertiser does not propose to sell it at half price. Is not this a specimen of directness and fair play, even with Gin, that is worth noting?

Some enterprising Advertisers win you at the start by a bit of humor. Notice the donkey at the head of this Earle ad. and the exhortation, "Don't be a mule!" There is the mule, sure enough, and you will smile at his obstinate attitude. A perfect donkey, is he not? And if you want a Heating Plant your house you will very likely look up D. E. Earle & Company. That mule "stays by you."

DON'T BE A MULE!

Our Editor, waiting a car on Broadway, saw on an upper floor of a Store opposite a sign "WASH HATS," and, following, "LIDS for KIDS." How many Mothers, at such a Poster, where Children's Hats were on sale, would smile; be at once interested in the goods offered and tell the joke in the family circle? "A little nonsense now and then is relished by the best of men."

For many years Rogers, Peet & Company have chosen to mark their daily ads. with a "more or less humorous illustration (?)." We all look at the ad. and smile at its grotesque heading if we do not read what follows. We never heard of any buyer who found fault with the Rogers, Peet clothing. There were any grounds for complaint the slip was made good by the firm instant. So notable a House at the same time affords some questions as to advertising methods and business policy. For days and days of late the papers have been full of the cut prices of these Merchants. Readers ask, "Can it be necessary to sacrifice 30 per cent. to 60 per cent. of regular marked prices in order to sell 'surplus stock,' and if it be a 'surplus stock' would not the Board of Directors, made up of experienced, level-headed Merchants, ask whether there was something wrong at the buying end of the House in so overloading its shelves with an unsalable surplus that a sacrifice like this at the end of the season was necessary? Would it not be 'better business' to buy or manufacture 20 per cent. less of stock in these lines at the opening of the demand and move all out at uniform prices in season, trusting to fill in with later orders if necessary, or make a plunge on new goods a little before the opening of the next season, and so get a fine start at profitable prices then? It may seem ungracious to suggest any question of business wisdom to such a Management, but if an ordinary Merchant or Manufacturer is tempted to follow this policy will he not have to pay dear for his business mistake?"

No! The $15 Summer Suit Sale is not setting!

It's rising!

Rising in opportunity in many ways!

With the first rush over our salesmen have the more chance to help you find the generous values here in your size.

ROGERS PEET COMPANY

Note the aftermath of such Cut Price Sale at the end of each season. The Editor congratulated a Banker friend of his a year or two ago on his good-looking suit. It was a Rogers, Peet, and the friend went on to say: "You know, that for several years past I have learned how to save 40 per cent. of my annual clothing bill. I have an average figure, and I am easily fitted from stock sizes. I wait until the season's end and then step in and supply myself on a 40 per cent. cut. My clothes are the same and I get as much value out of them, and I know six men about me in Wall Street who have learned the same trick."

That was good financially for these "Seven Wise Men of Gotham," was it not? The Editor put this in his pipe and smoked it for awhile. On Change one day he said to a Broker, "That's a nobby suit of yours." "Yes," replied the active man, "I have a Salesman friend in Rogers, Peet and at the end of the season I get a postal from him, saying, 'Come in, Harry, I have a bargain for you.' I go in and do this. I save 40 per cent. on my clothes and get the same value and satisfaction out of it." Our Editor smoked a little longer and came across an Advertising Man living in one of our New Jersey suburbs. He has two boys of the growing age and he had learned how to economize on clothing them. It was the same story. "Make the old clothes do until the end of the season, for once, and then buy for the boys and save the 40 per cent. or more." For instance he had just ordered three suits, at first sold at $15, for $7.50 each, and a Suit at $8, which early sold at $18.

After some more whiffs at this figurative pipe it occurred to the Editor that he would have a bit of personal experience along that line. His favorite recreation in the evening or on the Saturday Half Holiday is an Auto Ride. His sons or his daughters do him proud as Chauffeurs, and there hang on his frames four wraps suitable for Auto use all through the year. A heavy overcoat, long and ample, somewhat on the Chinchilla order, made to sell at $45, but bought at the end of the season at $24. A slightly lighter Winter wrap of the Rogers, Peet make, offered when fresh picked, at $34, whittled down to $17, and the day Ye Editor looked in, it had been marked again to $15. He has the receipted bill before him as he writes. Then came a lighter weight black coat, bought at 40 per cent. discount at the end of its first three months. This Spring he was looking for a Salt and Pepper Wrap, suitable for summer evenings. He found what would suit him at from $16 to $22, but he picked one up at Benjamin's late in July at $10. So you see, "Ye Editor" has been through this new Post Graduate Course, buying dollars for sixty cents, and while somehow this sacrificing of good material in this cannibalistic way goes against his grain, he looks at his four fine Coats as they hang there and understands what an appeal Cut Prices make to the Buying Public. He has saved a good $50 on that row of Coats which would have been in the Rogers, Peet Bank Balance but for their own work.* He abominates the "Cut Price" System, but he tried it out on Auto Wraps.

Do you not see something else in this story? Here are nine men in one's own circle who have been educated by Rogers, Peet & Company to hang off until the Cut Price comes and then take advantage of it? Can that in the long run be good for Rogers, Peet & Company? If nine men in this little circle have been taught this lesson, how many hundreds (thousands?) of men unknown to Ye Editor have been to School in the same fashion? Must it not appear to Rogers, Peet & Company that they are cutting their own throats? And will it not be soon a burning question, "How Long?" So a furious "Cut Price" Campaign may only represent "enterprise gone to seed." The final test must be this. Each dollar of merchandise sold should show—

1. The cost of the manufactured article itself when it goes out of the Store.
2. Plus the average overhead charge, comprising rent, possible depreciation of real estate, interest, labor, delivery cost, advertising and collection; the quota of loss by bad debts and depreciation of fixtures, and above all this.
3. The Net Profit. And the Merchant's life hangs on THIS!

* against themselves.

This Cut Price Business has spread far and wide. If Rogers, Peet & Company could pay such a price and call it advertising, and have the sole benefit of it, that might be one thing, but they have a host following their lead. Notice the Arnheim Ad. herein reproduced, and one of Benjamin's. Also the James McCreery Ad. taken from a Fifth Avenue Auto Bus. From the Daily Papers this same House announces a Special Sale, classified under five different items, showing between former and present prices a cut of from 30 to 50 per cent. Years ago George Crawford, genial and enterprising, was selling Ye Editor of a famous Ribbon Sale he had engineered for McCreery & Company, when they were in their Eleventh Street Store. It was well

And does it not beget in time a grudge against the House that serves them in this way? They feel they have been euchered out of their surplus cash. Is Resentment in a Customer's heart a good business Asset for Merchants to develop?

We have room for one more (Cammeyer). Here follow five different classes of Summer Shoes for Women at "Special" Prices. Our Advertising friend with two growing boys had a bit of experience here. I have bought my shoes at Cammeyer's for years. I have had a prejudice against the Cut Price Stores in those earlier days. Somehow it seemed to me as if there were something of the pirate instinct in the Merchant who did business in that way. But I have a normal foot in size and shape and Cammeyer Shoes always easily fit. Last year I paid $5 for my Summer Shoes; the other day I saw "Cuts" advertised—"Russet Leather Shoes, formerly sold at $5 now offered at $2.95." I went to my old friends and bought three pairs, anticipating wear for next Summer and perhaps for the Summer after. Instead of paying the House three times five ($15), I paid three times $2.95 ($8.85). I realize that somehow I am a changed man. Now it seems to me I would be a fool to throw away that extra $6.15, so I concluded I wouldn't do it.

professing to make cuts on Suits of 50 to 60 per cent. So the curse spreads through the country, not only shaking overboard the profit shekels of Merchants but demoralizing their patrons into a mob of trained, frenzied bargain hunters! The Specimens are only a Sample. The Papers of the Count are full of such.

Had you thought this thing out as to its ultimate effect? And this is only a beginning concerning ADVERTISING. Is there something in the topic thus far of our September Letter worth your while? But do not forget to help us with your advertising experience, profitable or otherwise? NOW will you?

Oh! one word more, if you please, for your private ear. Is there not more for you in the Ferris Famous Trade Mark Hams and Boneless Breakfast Bacon than you have yet turned into SATISFACTION AND PROFIT for yourself?

Forty years ago we began using two maxims expressing our Business Purpose and Policy. These live still and the American Consumers understand they are ours,—

(1) "Our Constant Aim is to Make Them the FINEST in the WORLD."

(2) "A Little Higher in Price—But!" And lastly came

(3) "THAT IRRESISTIBLE FLAVOR!"

"Catchy," aren't they?

Now is the Smoked Meat Line in your Store all you wish it were in Satisfaction to your Families, a Feather in your Reputation Cap, a Generous Feeder to your Bank Balance? Suppose you tie to THE FERRIS for keeps and see? Not one now and then among our four or five Brands, but "LEADERS" you know.

Printed Prices, Invariable!

Orders in by One O'clock can be shipped the same afternoon!

And how do you like our September Letter?—Interesting for Home Reading. Good for your wife and growing boys?

Our Wall Street Banker Friend took a copy of our August Letter home and read it aloud to his daughter and grandchildren; the next day his grandson of fourteen had a friend visiting him and called for The Grocer and read it aloud word by word, and the boys were as interested as if it were any Book of Travel or Adventure.

With all good wishes,

Your sincere friends,

country, and the Middle West, the heart of the canning section there, sought for bargains here at prices which they would not touch last month. The Eastern jobbers have been slow to buy tomatoes in liberal quantities, and when they do begin to buy freely they may have to climb for them. There are many tomato canneries in Maryland, Delaware and New Jersey that have not yet begun work, and those that have opened up have not made 50 per cent. of their output up to the same date last year. These unfavorable conditions to date do not mean that there is absolutely no chance for the tomato crop to come back before the canning season is over. There is usually during September a spell of warm weather, and the vines do not stop bearing fruit until there is a killing frost, so that, where there's life, there's hope.

Efforts to buy the fancy grades of corn this week developed the fact that the canners who pack a really fancy article are sold up to their limit for this season, and a little beyond it, perhaps. This is especially true of the fancy quality shoepeg variety, which is the nearest approach to green corn on the cob. The demand for the standard grades also increased this week. Green string beans and wax beans, especially the better grades, were fairly active again during the week. Outside of the daily assorted orders for small lots there was but little done this week in the other lines of canned vegetables and the price changes were nil.

The low prices for unpeeled pie peaches attracted buyers' attention last week, and there was enough business done to cause an advance in them. There was, also, better buying of seconds, or table peaches. Some very fancy high-flavored yellow peaches have been packed here, and they are worth attention. A few windfall pears are coming in, but the best fruit is not due until later on. New crop apples are arriving on a dull market. While there is a small increase in the buying of other fruits, berries, cherries, etc., the market for them is rather inactive. They will have their innings later on.

Cove oysters are unchanged; demand light, prices firm.

Dry Goods Business Better.

Marshall Field & Co., in their weekly review of the dry goods trade, say:—

Improvement and better feeling have been apparent in dry goods trading during the week, due in part to more seasonable weather for retail selling and for the maturing of crops.

Wholesale shipments have about equaled the unusually heavy distribution of the corresponding week a year ago. More retailers have visited the market and collections are normal. Our retail sales this week have been especially heavy.

There is a little more firmness to the cotton market, which is being reflected in the prices of manufactured goods.

AMONG THE TRADE.

During the week the Federation of Trade Press Associations has been holding its annual convention at the Hotel Bellevue-Stratford, this city. Three days were devoted to it, with a banquet addressed by the Secretary of the Navy, on Wednesday evening. Practically all of the business was technical, devoted to the publishing business.

The Philadelphia Match Sales Co., distributors of Ohio matches, will henceforth be managed by William S. Kurtz, brother of Horace Kurtz, of Reading, Pa. The office will not be conducted from New York, as we were informed by C. A. Wilsey, former manager, and published in a recent issue.

No Lower Prices for Ceylon India Tea While War Lasts.

Ceylon-India tea is not expected to become cheaper, in spite of heavy shipments of nearly 20,000,000 pounds from Ceylon and of 6,000,000 pounds from India. There has been a slight fall in the less expensive teas, but this, according to several of the largest retail houses in London, is nothing. There was plenty of room for a drop, as market prices had advanced considerably, in addition to the rise caused by the increase in the tea duty in November last. It is stated that owing to various special circumstances, such as the very greatly increased consumption in England, and also in France and Russia, the unprecedented requirements of the War Office for the supply of troops at home and abroad, enormous contracts for which are given out almost weekly, there has been an abnormal rise in market value. Common tea realizes about (24 1/3 cents) per pound in bond, 1s. 8d. per pound duty paid. It is curious to note that while France is using more tea, owing to its mode of preparation, in the United Kingdom the consumption of coffee has risen. For the past seven months the increased consumption of the United Kingdom was 8,375 cwt. (cwt. equals 112 pounds), and exports were up by 378,952 cwt. The advance is stated to be due partly to the large number of Belgian refugees, who can not be induced to drink tea, and also to the increase of coffee at many of the camps in some of the public houses at 10 o'clock. A large number of penny (2-cent) coffee bars have also sprung up over the west end of London, and these places, though frequented to a great extent by the new foreign population, have also obtained a fairly large clientele from the English working class.

Other grocers are daily convincing your customers of the promptness of motor delivery.

For to-day, more than ever before, continued patronage in the grocery business depends largely upon the maintenance of satisfactory delivery service from store to home.

Why not hold your own customers and obtain others from less progressive grocers? That is just what the Overland Delivery Car will help you to do.

The price of this car is astonishingly low. And the cost of operation is proportionately small.

It is cheaper than a horse and wagon to operate—yet it does three times as much work. It quickly reaches widely separated points. It will deliver a full load and be back for another before your horses are fairly started.

The famous 35 horsepower Overland motor has power in excess of anything you will ever require. It is smooth running and always dependable.

The Overland Delivery Car is electrically lighted and started. It has high tension magneto ignition, a revolving oil indicator, large tires and other advantages found on no other delivery car at this low price.

This substantial, highly efficient vehicle is not only saving money for many grocers—it is making money for them.

Here's a Great Scheme for You, Brave Fellow.

"Well, it's fly time again, ain't it?" I said to a customer of mine last month.

You'd think a real gent would take a remark like that all right, wouldn't you? When I said it to him he gave me one of the sourest looks I ever got from anybody outside my wife.

"Never mind about fly time," he said.

I simply grinned. He had good cause to be sour, I'll admit. Did I ever tell you about that?

D'ye know, there's a sort of disease most fellows with a retail store get some time in their lives, and I call it the scheme disease. Some of 'em never get over it, but most of 'em do get over it all right, and never get it again.

By scheme disease I mean a hunch to work schemes in their business, instead of just pulling and plugging away to work business up in the good old ways so what you put on will stay with you. There's all the difference between new business that you get by going out and working for it, and business that you pull in by some scheme, that there is between the fat you put on when you take milk and eggs and the fat you put on when you blow yourself up with a bicycle pump. One's the real stuff—you can count on it sticking to you. The other ain't.

Well, my friend there got the scheme disease last summer. He read about a stunt in some trade paper that looked pretty slick to him and he made up his mind he'd try it on. It was a stunt to get rid of all the flies in his place and then advertise big that he had. Sounds all right, don't it?

The way you got rid of the flies was to pay kids so much for every one they killed. He got a lot in his local paper about it. He appointed ten kids for each day and each one had an hour. He gave every one a wire fly killer and turned him loose in the store. Whenever he saw a fly he was to whack it and put it in his pile. At the end of the hour he got a cent for every one.

The scheme listens good when you just hear about it and don't work it. But to work it—holy shucks! I know all about my friend's experience, and I don't know why anybody else could have any better luck.

He got the free advertising all right enough, and that was one reason the scheme fell down. The paper printed so much about it that on the day the thing began there was a mob of gamins on the pavement all day long, pushing and yelling, "Go git him, Whitey!" and "Did ye git him, Reddy?" and "Skinny smashed another one!" and a whole lot of appetizing yelps that believe me ain't any kind of advertising for a grocery store.

My friend drove 'em away all he could, but he couldn't keep 'em clear away—it was too good a show.

When a kid would come out at the end of his hour, they would shout, "How much did ye git, Butch?" and one kid that wanted to show off told 'em a lie that he'd made $4.53. At that the mob let loose a howl that was heard for miles.

That would have meant he killed four hundred and fifty-three flies in an hour! Some flies! Great ad., believe me!

The worst fuss about it was over a little Italian kid whose dad kept a cobbler's shop next door. The kid was a hustling little tyke, and my friend thought he'd give him a show, so he appointed him for an hour late in the afternoon, 4 to 5, or something like that—anyway when business was likely to be doing.

Joey never hustled in his life like he hustled for flies. He hustled so he forgot there was anybody about but himself and the flies. If he saw something move that looked like a fly way down the counter, he would jump for it and he wouldn't see at all that there was two girls standing right in his way. He bumped into a little kid and knocked her down, and knocked a plant off its stand. My friend said he would rush about the store exactly like he was rushing to a fire.

My friend put up with it for about half an hour. Business hadn't been as good with Joey as he thought it ought to be, and he was starting to get even more of a move on, when my friend told him he'd have to stop—he couldn't stand it; he was getting in the way of customers.

Joey went in and told his father he'd been fired, and the Italian came in with his black hand and kicked. Said Joe hadn't had the same show the other kids had, and he wouldn't stand for it. He got so het up that a bunch of customers began to smell fresh blood and sneaked out. The mob on the sidewalk paid close attention to the fuss, too. In the end, to get out of trouble, my friend had to call Joey back.

The scheme lasted one long day. If it had lasted two days my friend would have gone to bed. His wife told me she never saw him so fussed up since she'd married him. He was going around with his hair standing up all over his head, and with red spots under his eyes, trying every few minutes to get rid of the mob on the pavement. The worst of it was that every time he would go out to shoo them away they would tell him why they thought he ought to go bag his head. Oh, it was some happy day!

It's done one thing for that fellow—it's cured him of the scheme disease. He wouldn't take up a scheme now if they guaranteed would double his business in 1 minutes. No more schemes him, he's done!

Pennsylvania Organization Notes.

Johnstown merchants have arranged a fall trade exposition and style show for September 22d, 23d and 24th.

Altoona has arranged for a fall display on September 15th and 16th which promises to be a big success.

Mr. Smedley organized the Erie Commercial Club on August 30th, with 68 members. Eighty of the prominent residents of the town, including a majority of the business and professional men, held a banquet at the Anderson House. It was an enthusiastic gathering and on every hand was evident the determination of all to work for a better and more influential community. Among the guests were Justice J. W. Kephart, of the Superior Court; District-Attorney C. C. Greer, of Johnstown, and John A. Schwab, of Lorain. Addresses were made by Judge Kephart, Mr. Greer and Mr. Smedley. Additional interest was lent to the meeting on the reading of a letter from Mrs. William Thaw, in which she offers prizes to be given the owners of the best-kept lawns. Officers were elected as follows: President, J. Hoyt; vice-president, J. G. Mark; secretary, Geo. M. Lang; treasurer, E. Studey.

Plans are in contemplation for enlargement of the scope of the State Association. Erie is leading off in movement. The State convention will decide whether this is wise or not.

Erie reports big gains in membership during the year. It has enlarged its functions, grouping the members into 33 distinct divisions. Each division is in charge of a committee of the whole. Manager Howe reports a big increase of interest.

During the past year Mr. Smedley visited all the local associations in the State except 11, traveled upwards of 60,000 miles, assisted in the organization of 12 new associations, reorganized two associations, made addresses before 10 associations that are not affiliated with the State body, assisted in the arrangements for three district conventions and made addresses in 151 towns and cities throughout Pennsylvania. A rough guess at the number of merchants who have attended the meetings would indicate over 10,000. Many associations show large gains in membership and influence.

328.—Will It Pay You to Incorporate Your Business?

I can answer this letter so as to interest every reader hereof:—

Albany, N. Y.

Please advise whether you would think it advisable for me to incorporate my business. I do a wholesale and retail business, established about 18 years. Do about $100,000 yearly, on a sound basis. The business is making money and would be attractive to investors, though I do not care to take in partners. It is now a one-man business and I do not want it to die when I do, so thought incorporating it might be the best way of continuing. Would of course have to take some else in, but would expect to control it as long as I lived. Have thought much about the question of incorporating, and have gotten some opinions on it and other men's judgment, but do not feel quite satisfied in my own mind as yet. Have read many of your articles and think you might be able to help. Have no objection to your publishing this letter, but do not give the name.

E. N. O.

The subject of this article will therefore be, "does it pay, in the average case, to turn a small or a moderate sized business into a corporation?" Generally speaking, my own judgment is that it does not, though there may be conditions under which it does. This correspondent mentions one of them. Where a man is the sole owner of his business, and is growing old, or if he wishes to ease up from some of the hard work, and wants to capitalize and perpetuate the name and reputation of the business, the thing to do is to incorporate it. In fact, incorporation is practically the only way in which he can accomplish these purposes completely, unless he has a son or sons to turn the business over to.

Generally speaking, the incorporation of an average business offers five advantages and an equal number of disadvantages. The advantages are as follows:—

1. The private assets of the owner or owners are not responsible for the corporation debts.

2. One's interest in the corporation can be freely sold without consulting one's fellow-owners, if there are any, while in a partnership a partner may not dispose of his interest without the consent of his fellow-partners.

3. A corporation is not dissolved by the death of any stockholder, while a partnership usually is, and an individual business simply descends to the owner's heirs and may soon disintegrate.

4. The stockholders of a corporation are not at the mercy of a single stockholder, as the members of a partnership are at the mercy of a single partner.

5. A corporation has perpetual life, while a partnership or an individual business may be dissolved by any one of several events.

The disadvantages are as follows:—

1. The expense of incorporating, and particularly the greater expense of maintenance, as trading corporations are almost always subject to special corporate taxes, in addition to all other taxes to which ordinary mercantile houses and individuals are liable.

2. Curtailed credit. The financial standing of a partnership or individual business is measured by the value of the partnership assets, or the assets of the individual business, plus the value of the personal assets of all the partners, or the personal assets of the individual owner. This is so because the private assets of the partners or owner are responsible for the firm debts. With a corporation only the corporate assets are responsible for the corporate obligations.

3. The minority stockholder is pretty nearly at the mercy of the majority interest, not only as to the management of the business, but as to the declaration of dividends. The rights and powers of the member of a partnership are much wider than those of a minority corporate stockholder.

4. A corporation is constantly under the supervision of the State, and if guilty either of sins of omission or commission, may be fined or even deprived of its charter.

5. A corporation is also subject for ratings of businesses of to the provisions of a usually tensive and complicated cod laws, which require its business be conducted in a certain way meetings and elections to be ducted after a certain prescribed form, and so on. This sometimes becomes irksome.

To say a little more these, the fact that in a corporation the personal assets of the owners are not liable for the corporation debts is a great protection—to owners—but it has a directly tailing effect on the corporation's credit. An individual owner's business which has tangible assets of $10,000 will usually be rated much more than $10,000 if he personally has assets outside of the business.

Selling Talks With Clerks

BY A MAN WHO HAS BEEN ONE

Conducted by W. E. SWEENEY, Manager for L. Lehman & Co.'s Department Food Store, Dover, N. J.

What Does It Mean to Grow?— Six feet isn't growing. You've known fellows nearly twice as tall as you are who couldn't figure out the one-half of 1 per cent. on $100 to save themselves. Real growing (commercially) is mental growth. You remember some time ago I had a paragraph that read something like this: "What have I done to-day to make this business better?" That's a very searching question. I found it on my desk one morning neatly written by a member of the firm with whom I am now associated. It went right straight home. Night after night I revolved in my mind the things I had "done." Some were small things, of course, but the sum total showed that I was a factor in helping to strengthen the business, and I felt proud of it. That's growing. Your mind is at work. A man's hands and legs and tongue may be busy all day long, yet he may have accomplished very little. To grow, gentlemen, you must actually put yourselves in the boss' place. If you don't, some day he's going to put another fellow in your place.

Women and Set Notions.—You know there are people who insist on picking. They want the nice, round, even potatoes; the largest grapefruit, all russet color; the sound, medium sized tomatoes, and so on. In justice to your firm, they should pay extra. Be open about it. This selection takes time, and it also digs into the heart of your stock. Yet it is never wise to come right out flat-footed and say: "I'll have to charge you more for selecting these." The nicer and more diplomatic way is to name the price when the order is completed. Yet even at that isn't policy to encourage this sort of thing, because you seldom make money on the "set-notion" woman. The thing I want to bring out is that you must at all times keep a single eye on the business end.

Welcome Innovations.—Innovations are simply introductions of new things or new ways of doing old things. You have been in the habit of coming to fill your shelves up at 9 in the morning and the manager says the thing must be completed at 9 in the morning—"welcome the innovation." Everybody can see that the new way is better.

One of the silliest mistakes clerks make is the common mistake of not "falling in line." What good does it do you to be antagonistic? You are scored as a sorehead and you're on the old-fashioned list.

You're not willing to learn, you're not even willing to experiment. Take the writer's advice and be good, cheerful, broad-minded fellows, and whenever the firm sees fit to introduce a new "line" and give it your enthusiastic support.

The Customer First.—What work you are doing back of the counter or front of it, for that matter, is your eye out for the customer. That's what pays your salary. Stock fixing must go. Cleaning must go. Gossip must go. Everything must go in deference to that 2-cent, $2 order. Get the money.

I always include the personal feelings of the owners, they being responsible for the debts of the business. But in the case of a corporation with assets of $10,000, it would be its rating even if the stock were held by millionaires. I have known of cases where owners of businesses with good credit incorporated them without considering the probable curtailing of credit, and found themselves seriously embarrassed, especially with the banks to whom they borrowed regularly. For the first time they were required to get another name on their business paper.

One of the greatest differences between a partnership and a corporation is the difference in the degree of liability in which owners or partners can be involved by the acts of their fellows. The acts of a corporation stockholder, director, employee, or even officer, bind the corporation only when he had actual authority to do them, while the acts of a partner usually bind his fellow-partners whether he had authority or not.

Summing it all up, incorporating is a thing to do, when for any reason a man wants to sell a share in his business and still control it, and when the advantages of doing this outweigh the disadvantages of doing business in the corporate way. He cannot sell a share to a partner and still control it, for as I have said, he is to a considerable extent at his partner's mercy.

The late vice-president was well and favorably known among the trade.

Consider These Talking Points

You can say more for Rumford Baking Powder than for any other baking powder on the market.

You can not only say that it will leaven more perfectly than any other powder, but that its use insures more wholesome and better food at a reasonable cost.

Rumford Sells readily and Pays you a Good Profit.

RUMFORD CHEMICAL WORKS, Providence, R. I.

The solution is in Crystal Domino Sugar Products—a right one for every purpose, always in sealed cartons, with weight and purity guaranteed. They save the multitude of small losses constantly present in over-weights, leakage, bags, twine and the open barrel.

The 10c. retail price of this carton makes these half-size tablets for tea and coffee a convenient purchase for everyone—everywhere.

Watch the Turnover

THERE is nothing in your store which moves faster than sugar.

It flows in and out each week with the regularity of day and night. Your problem is to secure a moderate profit on each sale of sugar, so that multiplied by thousands of sales, your final profit will overtop the slow, large profit sellers.

Editor "Science of Advertising."

Dear Sir:—Will you kindly criticize the inclosed price list? Am mailing this list to each of my customers, following my letter you published in the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" of August 16th.

Thanking you,
Yours truly,
A. H. KIRK.

The circular inclosed measured 8 x 13½, and was neatly, rather than artistically, printed on white paper. Here is the reproduction:—

This is a cut-price circular, pure and simple, and I should confidently expect it to pull orders. It looks alive. If Mr. Kirk keeps things moving this way, I have no doubt his credit-to-cash plan will succeed, though it takes longer to get credit people to pay cash than you think sometimes. I believe a good scheme is to contrast the prices you got for the same goods when you did a credit business. Rub it in on the people that they paid 5 cents right along for soaps that you offer now two for 9—which is 10 per cent. saving on two cakes. Kellogg's corn flakes the same way—10 cents under the credit system, 9 under the cash system—another 10 per cent. Tell them what that 10 per cent. means in a year. Your average customer spends at least $7 a week for food, and—you sell general merchandise—perhaps $3 for general necessities, $10 a week in or $520 a year. Ten per cent. saving is $52, enough to give the whole family a vacation, enough to buy a good talking machine, enough to pay the interest on $1,000 loan with which they can buy an automobile—enough to buy that piece of furniture they have been craving so long. You have got to show people and show them and show them again, when you want them to change their habits, particularly when you want them to exchange a convenient habit for an inconvenient one.

I would use a headline other than the name of my store, if I were Mr. Kirk. "Read These and Remember What You Paid Before" would be a good headline.

Weekly Window Display Suggestions

Fruit Sale.

A clever idea would be to borrow some jars of preserved fruit and jelly from one of your customers to use during this display. Your customer would probably feel highly honored at having her work on display. Now first cover the bottom of the window with green crepe paper and run a white cord across the rear of the window also. Finish that with a twisted strip of white crepe paper all around the green, the sides included. Put two cheese boxes at the rear at each side of the window and scallop four pieces of white crepe paper to put at the top and bottom of each box. Fill these with peaches and pears. Toward the front of the window place on white napkins homemade jelly and preserves. Back of that place jars of pears and peaches preserved—the whole fruit and also in halves. Don't forget the sign card at the rear of the window.

Window Display Awards Postponed

We made a mistake fixing September 1st as the end of the Lipton Window Dressing Contest. It's a bad time, when clerks or proprietors are away on their vacations.

So many people have told us this, that we have decided to postpone the award of prizes until

NOVEMBER 1, 1915

The contest is for the five best window displays of Lipton's Tea. Here are the conditions:—

The "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" will give to the five retail dealers who make the most attractive window displays of Lipton's Tea before the end of this contest, the following cash prizes:—

For the Best	-	-	-	-	$75
For the Second	-	-	-	-	$50
For the Third	-	-	-	-	$25
For the Fourth	-	-	-	-	$15
For the Fifth	-	-	-	-	$10

CONDITIONS:

1. The display entered in the contest must be of Lipton's Tea alone.
2. The display must remain in the window one week.
3. Each contestant must send to this office a photograph of his display or a careful detailed description of it. Naturally a picture would be better, though a contestant need not incur that expense if he does not wish to. Almost every family now has a kodak-user in it who could photograph a window display.
4. Each contestant if he decides to enter the contest, will kindly drop this office a postal card to that effect.
5. The contest closes November 1, 1915.

The Subscribers' Bargain List

Have you got any goods you don't want? Anything—canned goods, groceries, hardware, dry goods, anything at all that's in good condition, but won't sell for you.

If you will make a price on it we can probably sell it for you in a hurry. Write us about it, stating the quantity, condition and your best price. You might give the original cost, too. We will give it a key number and offer it to our 4,000 subscribers. Your name will not appear unless you want it to. All sales ought to be on a cash basis.

The point is that what won't sell for you may be in everyday demand for somebody else, who will be glad to get your stock of it at a bargain.

There will be no charge for this service anywhere—we do it to help along.

Important Notice to those Advertising in the Exchange Department

If the goods advertised do not move after four weeks, will the owner kindly notify us, so that the offer may be discontinued? We desire to keep the department as clean and fresh as possible and if goods don't move in four weeks they will probably not move at all.

A Sales Repeater

is purchased, say, two or three times every week by the housewife who bakes. And every time she comes in for a "cake of yeast" you have a fine chance to talk up and sell her other things too.

WANT DEPARTMENT

Answers to Want Advertisements inserted in this department may be addressed to the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" when desired, provided the advertisement is accompanied by 10 cents in stamps to pay for remailing the same. The price of each insertion is two cents per word in advance.

THE VALUE OF BRIGHT STORES

The difficulty of making a sale—whether it be dry goods or vegetables, jewelry or shoes—increased tenfold in a poorly lighted store. Other things being equal, the Electrically lighted shop will do more business than the store which uses other illuminants. "Indoor daylight" can only be obtained by the use of Mazda Electric lamps.

Here Is Your Question Answered

Why put in Croft's Swiss Milk Cocoa when you are selling five brands now? Well, because it is different from the rest, for one reason. It is the only cocoa packed in glass. It stands alone, and you know how novelty helps a thing to sell. The grocer who infuses a little novelty into his business is the grocer who succeeds.

Another thing, Croft's Swiss Milk Cocoa is better than the rest. That isn't a bluff, honestly. We take out of our cocoa, in the making, a substance which other manufacturers allow in, greatly to the injury of the flavor of their goods.

Now do you know why you should sell it?

Will you mention the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" when you write?

A product which has been on the market fifty-eight years is a product which has stood the hardest of all tests—the test of time. "Knight's Cooking Extracts" is a phrase familiar to man, woman and child, from the Atlantic to the Pacific and from the Lakes to the Gulf. It is easy to tell why; no housewife ever had a bottle go back on her and no housewife ever will. Good extracts must be on your shelves. Grocers, if you sell Knight's Extracts we need say nothing more to you; if you don't, we want one order from you—we are sure of more. You are certain of their absolute purity and a good profit.

Smedley's Summary of the Pennsylvania Convention

State Organizer Analyzes Its Work and Gives Running Story of the Sessions. A Good Convention From Every Standpoint. Pennsylvania Plan Awards Show Large Membership Increases.

Well, the 19th annual convention of the State Association is a thing of the past. It was a success. Not so large in point of attendance as the one held in Philadelphia in 1914, but that was to be expected. There was great interest and enthusiasm manifested from start to finish. The programme was a good one and carried out to the letter. The addresses were of a character to impress the delegates with the great possibilities of organization and were of educational value.

We have seldom heard addresses by more able men or on more interesting subjects. The address of C. M. Ketchum on "Community Development," J. C. Norris' talk on "Making the Hire Worthy of the Laborer," and "Figuring Profits," by Mr. E. A. Walton, will long be remembered. Other notable speakers were A. M. Howes, Theo. Landsberg, of Erie, and James M. Dunbar, of Meadville. The latter talked on "Banking." Mr. Hyndman's paper on "The Workmen's Compensation Act" was well received.

The convention was honored by the presence of James Hewitt, Esq., president of the Tri-State Wholesale Grocers' Association, and E. W. Heffner, ex-president of the Pennsylvania State Pharmaceutical Association, who presented fraternal greetings from their respective organizations. H. W. Shaffer, of Lock Haven, was to have made an address on "Essentials of a Successful Business," but lack of time prevented its delivery and it will be printed. One of the hits of the convention was the address of H. Diamond, of Galion, Ohio, which combined most happily sound sense and humor.

In the absence of J. Denny O'Neill, State President, H. W. Shaffer, one of the vice-presidents, presided, and he did this most acceptably. The officers for the coming year are as follows: President, J. C. Norris, New Castle; vice-presidents, C. S. Smith, Washington; Ely Bion, Sunbury; J. A. Edgar, Frankford; Theodore Landsberg, Erie. It took three ballots to elect the president, the contestants being Geo. McGarry, Johnstown; J. C. Norris, New Castle, and H. W. Shaffer, Lock Haven. Punxsutawney and Bradford made a strong fight for the next convention, Bradford winning. Oil City has put in a strong bid for the 1917 convention. All the manufacturers in the Pennsylvania Plan were represented and made splendid exhibits and were most liberal givers of souvenirs. The Meadville Association was a good host.

Large increases in membership were reported by many associations as follows: Erie, 229; Johnstown, 122; Pottsville, 96; Berwick, 82; Frankford, 79; Lebanon, 33; Sunbury, 74; Homestead, 64; Bethlehem, 49; Punxsutawney, 44. These were the leaders; nearly all reports showed a nice increase.

Pennsylvania Plan awards were made as follows: For largest sale of merchandise, Scranton, 1,648 points, $500; Philadelphia, 1,498 points, $300; Pittsburgh, 897 points, $100; Pittston, 884 points, $100; Mt. Carmel, 761 points, $100; Lebanon, 751 points, $75; Lock Haven, 549 points, $75; Frankford, 515 points, $50; Pottsville, 480 points, $50; Nanticoke, 330 points, $50; New Castle, 240 points, $25; Erie Grocers, 193 points, $25; Warren, 160 points, $25, and Meadville, 140 points, $25. Total, $1,500.

Prizes were awarded for increase of membership as follows: Erie, $100; Johnstown, $50; Pottsville, $25; Berwick, $25. Total $200. Pittsburgh carried home a prize of $100 for largest delegation to the convention. Seven hundred dollars was handed over to the State Association to be used to pay, so far as it will go, the mileage of delegates. There was great enthusiasm when the money was handed out by Messrs. Wessels and Smedley.

The convention took a strong stand against trading stamps, made plans for a legislative fund, side-tracked a proposition to change the name of the association and arranged to plan a campaign to secure legislation for the proper licensing of transient vendors.

The report of the Legislative Committee, while discouraging, did not dismay the delegates, who manfully decided to try again. A pleasant feature of the convention was the presence of R. A. Stevenson, first State secretary, who was honored by being asked to make an address.

No radical features were proposed at the convention and really very little constructive work planned, but it is our belief that the new officers and Executive Committee will put in operation a year many new things that stand for trade uplift and betterment. The State Association is stronger to-day than it has been in its history and the delegates will return to their homes with a better understanding of the needs and possibilities of organization than ever before. The personnel of the convention was high. The delegates were strong men with vision who discussed ably the topics that were brought to their attention. The new association year should be one of great progress.

Cutting by Wholesalers That Wins Nothing But Makes Everybody Lose

New Jersey Jobber Says His Philadelphia Competitors Come Into His Territory and Get His Business Merely Price-Cutting. He Then Cuts, Too, and Nobody is Benefited, But All Profit is Gone. Asks Why Salesmanship Isn't Used?

Through your valued paper, I wish to ask the Philadelphia jobbers, whom I see are now trying to get together to co-operate in buying, whether their idea of co-operation and good business is the way they do business in New Jersey.

The writer is a wholesale grocer doing business exclusively in New Jersey. We have our salesmen on the road, and do our best, like all jobbers, to sell good goods to good people and make a good profit. If we can't make a good profit, we try to make a fair profit, but we certainly resent it when we are asked to do business on no profit at all.

That is what the Philadelphia jobbers are asking us to do and if we will do it they are apparently willing to do the same thing. They send their men over here among our customers. We are doing business regularly, and selling everything at list or nearly list. Their salesmen haven't been in the State five minutes before they have cut prices to cost or very near it. Apparently they feel that they have no other argument to offer than a cheaper price.

What is the result? As soon as we find that our customer has been approached, we at once get on the job and meet whatever price has been made. Often we endeavor to go one better, so very often the Philadelphia house does not get business. We hold the business but thanks to the Philadelphia jobber, we no longer make any money on it.

Why can't these people use salesmanship instead of simply cutting their own and our throats? If we are getting list price for Kellogg Corn Flakes and some Philadelphia jobber comes along and gets the business away from us, at the same price, we say he deserves it for he is a better salesman than we are. But there is nothing respectable in getting business away from somebody else merely by cutting price. Any half-witted pirate can do that.

I am a member of the Wholesale Grocers' Association of Pennsylvania, New Jersey and Delaware and it is a fact that its Philadelphia members are the chief offenders in this respect. How would they like the New Jersey jobbers to combine and send men over into their territory and do the same thing?

A NEW JERSEY WHOLESALE GROCER.

—N. J., September 15, 1915.

Mr. Grocer:—

There should be no sort of misunderstanding about our mutual relations. We have nothing whatever to sell you.

We are not asking you to buy United Coupons.

In fact, you could not buy United Coupons from us—nor could your competitor, as they are not for sale to retail grocers in your territory.

We want to make this point as clear as it is possible to make it—that the service of the United Coupon is in no way a tax on you, direct or indirect.

A FEW PLAIN STATEMENTS ABOUT UNITED PROFIT-SHARING COUPONS

1. They are NOT for sale to you or to your competitors.
2. They do not cost your customers anything.
3. They do not increase the cost of goods they are packed with.
4. They do not lower the quality of the goods they are packed with.
5. They do not decrease your profits on these goods.

What United Coupons Really Are

1. They are a part of the manufacturers advertising spent for you in your store.
2. They are a sound means of popularizing and creating a steady demand for standard household products sold at home.
3. They will increase trade for you on STAPLE GOODS such as tea and coffee, soap, salt, baking powder, etc.—articles with which your customers habitually expect premiums but which they do not always buy from you.
4. They are accepted and collected by the public as the "most valuable premium coupons in the world."

Mr. Grocer:

If you let any mistaken impressions cause you to fail to take advantage of this new, positive force, you are losing a big opportunity to get and hold profitable trade upon which your success depends.

Give In to the Customer, Says Mann of New Jersey

Answering Mr. Wenger's Question If He Did Right to Let a Customer Go Rather Than Fill Up a Vinegar Jug for a Gallon When It Held More Than a Gallon, Well-Known New Jersey Grocer Says He Should Have Given the Extra Vinegar and Held His Trade.

[In a recent issue, E. G. Wenger, a Pennsylvania subscriber, told of a customer who bought a gallon of vinegar and complained because his jug was not filled up. The point was that the jug held more than a gallon. Mr. Wenger declined to give him more than he paid for and the customer took offense and left. We submitted to our subscribers Mr. Wenger's question, "Did I Do Right to Let Him Go?" Several replies have already been received and the following is another.—Ed.]

The question put to you by your subscriber, Mr. E. G. Wenger, of Chambersburg, Pa., and you in turn put it up to your readers, and I being one of the readers I am taking great pleasure in answering Mr. E. G. Wenger his very important question.

Now if Mr. E. G. Wenger wants to know if he is right in handling this vinegar customer I will tell him that he is right, if that is all he wants to know, but if Mr. Wenger would possess qualifications, confidence in himself, convincing power, straight talk, winning confidence, good knowledge how to handle a greedy customer, it was the easiest thing for Mr. Wenger or any other merchant to take that jug pleasantly and cheerfully and put it under the vinegar barrel and open that faucet with full pressure and fill it up so that the vinegar would run over the jug, regardless of what it would hold, if a quart, one-half gallon or perhaps a half tumbler would do the trick, and say to his customer, "You are right, my friend, here is your jug full, you have my apology for it, that I had to bring you back to the store; leave it here—my wagon is going that way very shortly and will leave it at your house. Thank you very kindly, friend; come in again. Good-bye."

My dear brother grocer, Mr. Wenger, do you know that the grocery business is a trade? And the secret lies in that trade, in knowing your customers from top to bottom. Don't you know the old saying, "Once a customer always a customer"? And satisfied customers are mine or any other merchant's best assets. Losing them for what, a tumbler of vinegar; wholesale price is about 10 cents a gallon. What are you getting for it, Mr. Wenger, 20 or 25 cents a gallon? Does it pay to lose a good account of $25 per month for a mere trifle? No, never.

I adopted a policy at my store that our customers are always right, no matter how wrong they are. I have never lost anything by it. I have a long list of friends connected with my store, in fact every customer is a friend; I make them feel so. No merchant can afford to lose trade, especially good trade. While lots of merchants would say that it is impossible to give in, and say that the customer is always right, but thanks to the one in Heaven all of our customers are not greedy ones, and all of them are not insisting and persisting in receiving more than they are paying for, and when it happens that we get a few, by meeting them cheerfully you can get that greedy feeling out of them, and instead of finding fault with your store, merchandise, weights and measures, and service, they become boosters for you and for the store, and they know that you meet them all the time, regardless how high they kick, and very little you lose by it, my friends.

Now, morally and principally I will say again that Mr. Wenger was right in not giving his customer more than 4 quarts for a gallon, but is he right in letting this man go away with his $25 a month business, and with the impression on him that he did not receive a gallon when he was charged for a gallon? A full gallon of whisky from the distiller, which is 5 or 10 times the value, and the stingy, narrow measure from his grocer! Mr.

Wenger could have handled his customer in a far better way than by standing and arguing with him that 4 quarts is a gallon and that was what he was charged for. It sounds to me like baby talk and should never happen with a wide-awake merchant of these days, when competition is so keen and great. Mr. Wenger has to make some allowance for this particular customer. If he is a cranky customer or one that kicks more than the ordinary one, he has to learn how to handle this customer. Every good physician tries to learn his patient before he prescribes for him; why can't a merchant learn his customers the same way? It is not harder than the other way to me. Is it to you?

Experience is the best teacher and this has been my experience through business life. Satisfied customers are the best advertisers for you and for me and for all of us. I would like to see as many answers as possible through the columns of the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" from experienced men all over the country.

SOLOMON MANN.

Plainfield, N. J.,

September 15, 1915.

The following opinion on the same subject has also been received:

By Fred Martin, Tioga Center, N. Y.

The trouble that Mr. E. G. Wenger had with the vinegar customer reminds me of an experience I had with a good lady customer about a jug of vinegar. I was selling R. & J. C. Motts vinegar for 25 cents per gallon, with which I filled her jug and charged her 25 cents at which she kicked and said she paid only 20 at the other store. I said please excuse me, I suppose you wanted the best. I went into the back room where I kept the vinegar, poured out one quart and put in one quart of water, brought it out and she tasted and liked it and I kept on doing that way with her for over a year. When one day I put in three quarts of vinegar and took 15 cents for it I told her she could put the water in when she got home. Says I, it is too bad to make you carry that quart of water home every time, when she had so much in her nice spring. Well, you ought to have seen the look she gave me. She first thought she would be mad, but she saw the whole thing from my standpoint and said it served her right for being such a — fool. I didn't lose her trade, but in fact got more of it. She kept on buying three quarts and adding the water, which she said was good enough for anybody to use.

It was good goods, all right, and it stood right up so much for selling the best goods, which was my way with any and all goods, and I went out by so doing.

How the General Chemical Co. Hopes to Prevent Cutting on Its New Baking Powder

Will Not Sell to Retailers, But Will Make Them Its Agents to Sell the Powder at a Fixed Price. Retailer Buys Nothing But Takes Powder Practically on Consignment and After Selling Deducts His Commission and Remits the Balance.

With reference to our merchandising plan for Ryzon baking powder, we take pleasure in inclosing you a sample of each label of grocery size, from which you will see that the price of these goods is printed right on the labels: 10 cents per $\frac{1}{4}$ pound; 18 cents per can for $\frac{1}{2}$ pounds, and 35 cents for pounds. Furthermore, this is the only price on Ryzon—the price to the consumer—our relations with the retailer or wholesaler being on a basis of compensation or commission to such agencies in return for service rendered in selling and distributing these goods for us, as agents of the General Chemical Co., food department.

We shall fix and hold the price of Ryzon powder by making the trade our agents instead of selling the powder outright to them. Following is the plan, which is printed on the back of our sales blanks:—

RYZON RETAIL AGENCY TERMS.

1. Title of all Ryzon shall remain in General Chemical Co. until sold by Retail Agent, and title of all ceeds shall at all times be in General Chemical Co.

Retail Agent shall hold and good care of all Ryzon until or returned as below stated, shall not be responsible for loss damage by fire or other cause bed control.

Sales shall be made only at single standard retail prices to sumers specified on the face of order (and on invoice). Retail ent may, upon any sale, extend customary credit for purchase e, but shall account for the e on every sale as if full paid in on delivery.

Retail Agent shall be allowed all sales, and may deduct from ittances of proceeds, commis-s as follows:—

5 per cent. from remittances within 30 days from invoice date.

3 per cent. from remittances after 30 and within 60 days from invoice date.

0 per cent. from remittances after 60 days from invoice date.

At 90 days from invoice date, monthly thereafter, Retail ent shall remit for all sales not iously remitted for.

Retail Agent shall at any time request ship to, or upon the or-of, General Chemical Co. any all Ryzon not sold by said ail Agent.

General Chemical Co. may ter-ate this agency at any time by ce to Retail Agent.

Retail Agent shall not delegate any party any authority here-er.

Shipment of Ryzon on this er, or on any future order of Re-Agent, shall constitute authori-on of Retail Agent, including ise under United States Letters ent No. 1,037,078, to hold and ose of such Ryzon, and the pro-ls thereof, as above stated, but otherwise.

rhaps the fullest explanation
e whole plan, from beginning to end, is the following from our Sales Manual:—

THE RYZON SALES PLAN.

Ryzon is sold to consumers only through the regularly appointed sales agencies of the General Chemical Co., at the single standard retail prices to consumers specified on the packages, requisitions and in-voices.

The General Chemical Co. does not sell Ryzon to any agent, middleman, retailer, wholesaler or jobber, but utilizes the selling and distributing facilities of all such agencies as are efficient and desirable for the sale of Ryzon to the consumer for the account of the General Chemical Co.

Sales agents or distributors are allowed suitable compensation or selling commission in accordance with the services rendered in selling, warehousing, delivering or financing the sale and distribution of Ryzon to consumers, as specified in agency agreement to be made in connection with first requisition for stock of Ryzon for any agency.

The General Chemical Co. assumes entire responsibility for the character, quality and sale of Ryzon to the consumer, retaining ownership of Ryzon until actually sold to consumers.

Under this plan the distributor, whether wholesaler or retailer, is relieved from speculation in the stocking or sale of Ryzon. He is not required to invest a cent of his capital therein, and is assured of a proper and certain compensation for his services, in accordance with his success as a salesman and distributor of Ryzon.

Under this plan the consumer will have the option of buying Ryzon at the standard price to consumers, made by the General Chemical Co. through its accredited agents. If Ryzon does not appeal to consumers in quality and value at the said price, there are other baking powders on the market which consumers can purchase at the prices current for same.

General Chemical Co. will exercise its right in the selection of its agencies, employing only those with whom it can co-operate to mutual advantage.

Distributors, whether retailers or wholesalers, have the option of accepting or declining an agency for Ryzon on the terms presented. If any dealer does not desire to become an agent for Ryzon in accordance with conditions specified, it is his privilege to decline the Ryzon agency and confine his business to other baking powders in competition with Ryzon.

The Essence of Co-operation

When a man asks you to co-operate with him it usually means that he wants you to do something for him—in return for which he will promise to do something for you. In other words, most offers of co-operation are bogus.

This one is not. We have already done big things for you and we have contracted to do many more big things.

You have seen the first page of our national advertising campaign in The Saturday Evening Post and The Ladies' Home Journal. These pages should be to you an earnest of our intention to create for you the biggest demand for raisins and raisin bread that you ever experienced. And these pages will be followed by continuous, sustained advertising which will prove our intention.

Get This Right

But let us not be misunderstood. We do not claim to be business philanthropists. Our ultimate aim is to help ourselves by selling a great many more raisins than we have ever sold before.

When we co-operate with you we do it for our own sake—not for yours—but it is a fact that our co-operation helps you.

Also—when you co-operate with us you do it for your own sake—not for ours—but it is a fact that your co-operation helps us.

This is the very essence of co-operation—some people call it "enlightened selfishness"—help yourself by helping the other fellow.

You Will Get Your Share of the new business which we are creating for raisins and raisin bread if you become identified in your neighborhood as the age raisins.

WITH THE EDITOR

Several weeks ago a Pennsylvania subscriber to this paper wrote a letter in which he told of a storekeeping incident highly interesting to every retailer. A customer had ordered a gallon of vinegar and had gotten a gallon, but complained because his jug was not full. He argued that whenever he got a gallon of whisky in that jug the distiller filled it. The merchant proved to him by actual measurement that he had gotten fair measurement, but he was not satisfied and left, taking with him trade worth $25 per month.

The subscriber asked us to say whether he did right to let the customer go. I submitted the question to the subscribers, several of whom replied. I said when the matter came in that I also had an opinion, which in time I would express. My opinion is that as a matter of principle, the subscriber was right in refusing to give his customer more than four quarts to a gallon. Naturally it is not debatable that no man can claim more than he pays for.

But as a matter of practical merchandising, I think he was wrong. Obviously it would have paid better to give a few gills more vinegar for the money whenever a gallon was ordered, and hold $25 worth of trade. The dignified, honest and praiseworthy stand which this merchant took is, practically speaking, a poor recompense for losing $300 worth of business a year, and more than that, gaining an enemy. Of course he may be in a position where he can stand the loss. To every one who is, it is an enormous satisfaction to stand up for principle, wherever it leads.

There is no principle of honor and honesty in the case which would require one to stand for it without regard to loss. It is a matter that can fairly be viewed in the light of dollars and cents—which course pays the best, to stand the extortion and hold the customer, or refuse to stand it and lose the customer? Naturally there is only one answer.

It would be fine if we could do a successful business without making concessions to customers to which they were not entitled, but who can do business that way? Not one merchant in the whole United States.

The big mail-order houses of the United States have a cheeky habit of writing retailers all over the country for reports on the financial condition of customers. The following is a particularly obnoxious and bothering request that went to an Illinois retailer from a Chicago mail-order house:—

Dear Sir:—The above party ordered merchandise from us some time ago, giving the names of several citizens of your town as references, among them yours, asking that we refer to these references to find out about the local credit standing.

We did write to several of the references given, but neglected to write you. It probably would have been much better had we referred to you before shipping the merchandise, as our information would have been more exact. However, we are writing you now and will request that you kindly give us all the information you possibly can concerning this party that will enable us to effect a settlement of the account at this late date.

We do not believe your name would have been given as a reference if you were not well acquainted with our customer. Therefore, it would be greatly appreciated if you would speak to him personally concerning the amount that he owes us. We also ask that you kindly advise whether or not the address given above is correct, and if not, what the new address is. If this party is employed at present, please tell us by whom employed. If a property owner, advise us to what extent and if there is any good reason why this account should not or cannot be paid, please let us know about it, so that we can be governed accordingly in our future action.

We are inclosing herewith a stamped envelope for your convenience in making reply and anything you can do for us will be greatly appreciated. We believe that you are interested enough and will help us.

Yours very truly,
SPIEGEL, MAY, STERN Co.

The busy retailer is invited to break away from whatever he is doing, read this long letter and then write an equally long reply. Why? Because he owes any obligation to the mail-order house? Certainly not, quite the contrary. Because he owes any obligation to his customer? Just there is the rub of the whole case. If the customer was a good one, and was just buying one or two things of the mail-order house, it might be risky to queer the sale. What would a retailer answer when his customer came in and said: Mr. Jones, I gave your name as reference to Sears, Roebuck & Co. the other on a little goods I wanted to there, and they say they wrote you, but you wouldn't give them any information. What was the matter—couldn't you say anything good about me?" The retailer would find it very hard to make answer that would please his customer.

Naturally, if the customer lost one, the matter is not debatable. Let the mail-order houses pay their credit information like other people do.

In last Sunday's "Public Ledger" appeared an article the purpose of which was to teach the housewife to pay cash for her groceries and shop around. Which is right, from the consumer's standpoint, but listen to what the "Ledger" writer says about the bad debt of the credit dealers, which credit customer must pay for:—

Right here lies one reason for soaring prices. Dealers lose far more than the average customer realizes by charge accounts. In the poorer sections, where the storekeeper is "as good as" his customers and dares frankly to refuse to allow them to run bills, the loss from charge accounts is between 1 and 2 per cent. of sales. In the "fine sections" of the city, loss from charge accounts ranges from 15 to 20 per cent. Cash customers are paying for goods that their eminently respectable neighbors have eaten. Of course, the dealer must come out all right somehow.

Under the most favorable conditions, according to this, a retailer's bad debt losses are 1 to 2 per cent. a year, and the large centers, like Acker and Martindale and Hanscom and several others in Philadelphia, Park & Tilford in New York, and so on, lose from fifteen to twenty per cent. of the gross credit business! What utter ignoramus!

The Pennsylvania Convention Report

We are not able to follow our usual custom of publishing the stenographic report of the Pennsylvania Retail Merchants' Association the week after it is held. The "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" employed a stenographic reporter, in common with the State Association, and he and his report seem to have gotten lost in the shuffle. Not a line of it has been received as yet. This paper greatly regrets not to be able to publish it, but somebody seems not to be on his job.

Tide of Failures Shows Signs of Turning.

In Some Lines August Failures Are Less Than in August, 1914, and Increases, Where There Are Increases, Are Not Great.

The official report of commercial failures for August, 1915, shows that the tide has begun to turn. For the first time in several months, the failures in August in some lines were less than in August, 1914.

The figures are as follows:—

Clothing and Furnishing.—August, 1915, 87; liabilities, $200,618; August, 1914, 105; liabilities, $1,130,550.

General Stores.—August, 1915, 98; liabilities, $707,835; August, 1914, 83; liabilities, $558,960.

Groceries.—August, 1915, 282; liabilities, $1,165,790; August, 1914, 213; liabilities, $1,726,745.

Dry Goods.—August, 1915, 64; liabilities, $874,454; August, 1914, 52; liabilities, $788,640.

Shoes.—August, 1915, 31; liabilities, $142,549; August, 1914, 25; liabilities, $175,380.

Hardware.—August, 1915, 2; liabilities, $191,584; August, 1914, 18; liabilities, $201,379.

In chemicals and jewelry the year's failures were also less than those of a year ago.

We would be pleased to have for publication in this column the ideas of our readers upon trade topics, being understood that we do not hold ourselves responsible for any views expressed therein. All communications must be accompanied by the writer's name and address as an evidence of good faith, but not necessarily for publication. All inquiries within our power to answer will also be noticed in this department.

The Editor.

Dear Sir:—Would you please give me the address of a reliable shoe manufacturer located either West or East.

We have been doing business with the Brown Shoe Co., of St. Louis. We were supposed to have the exclusive sale of their shoes in this vicinity, but they have taken up with one of our competitors, so have concluded to drop them. Yours respectfully,

From the American Grocers' Society.

Newark, N. J., Sept. 14, 1915.
To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—How can you reconcile your editorial columns of September 13th with your editorial columns of August 9th? In your August 9th issue you go to considerable length to put the American Grocers' Society in a bad light before your subscribers. There is such a thing as damning by faint praise and in many instances your praise is very faint indeed. Many retail grocers who subscribe for your publication are beginning to think that your utterances are jobber-inspired, although our members gave you full credit for throwing your columns open to John M. Adam's letter which appeared in the September 6th issue.

Here is your inconsistency: In the August 9th issue you have mentioned the fact that the American Grocers' Society will probably put out its own labeled goods and you have mentioned it in such a way that we appear in a very bad light. In the current issue of September 13th you comment very favorably upon the United Grocers' Society of London and its aim to put out a line of groceries under the London grocers' own label. Now, Mr. Editor, will you please turn to your back numbers and square your various editorial utterances? Why is a co-operatively owned label good in London and bad in America? In Mr. Adam's letter, which you so kindly reproduced in your September 6th issue, Mr. Adam tells grocers that he is already handling the American Grocers' Society's own manufactured goods and mentions the fact that the American Grocers' Society coffee has increased his coffee business 50 per cent. over what it used to be and that he is making a larger profit on it because it is his society's own brand.

Here is the whole crux of the situation: No chain store can get that coffee. Consequently, no chain store can cut the price and all American Grocers' Society labels must be sold at protected prices which automatically protect the profits. Rexall and the American Druggists' Syndicate items, of which there are fully 1,500 different ones, are never cut and the druggists will lose their buying privilege if they cut a price.

If you care to investigate you will find that the American Grocers' Society is an absolute copy of the great co-operative societies of Europe, and this organization is in the hands of experts who are acquainted with co-operative businesses on both sides of the ocean. We suggest that you investigate the co-operative societies of Europe. Take for example the Wholesale Co-operative Society of England. Then study up the Rexall and the American Druggists' Syndicate's plan. Then come to Newark and we will show you where this organization is an exact combination of the best that there is in Europe and America.

As you have shown a spirit of fairness in publishing Mr. Adam's letter we would still like to think that the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" is not a jobber's

The American Grocers' Society has never been criticised merely because it intended to pack its own goods and ask grocers to sell them. It has been criticised because it sold package goods below cost in order to bait retailers into buying its stock. This appeared and still appears to us as fundamentally bad business, for if continued it would inevitably lead to exhaustion of the capital—the money which retailers had invested. And if not continued it would stamp the whole enterprise as a fraud. Selling goods below cost is a fine thing for the buyer, as a buying proposition, but investing in the stock of a concern that does it is another thing.

Court Refuses to Grant Injunction Prohibiting Southern Cotton Oil Co. From Selling Cooking Oil Without Premium Coupons.

Suit of United Profit Sharing Corporation Growing Out of Cotton Oil Co.'s Refusal to Carry Out Its Contract to Pack United Coupons in Wesson and Snowdrift Oil Heard in United States Court. Preliminary Injunction Refused But Case Not Heard on Its Merits.

The United Profit Sharing Corporation's application for a temporary injunction to prohibit the Southern Cotton Oil Co. from selling Snowdrift or Wesson oil that does not contain United Coupons has been heard by the United States Court in Trenton, N. J., and denied.

The beginning of this case was told in a recent issue. The Southern Cotton Oil Co. and the United Profit Sharing Corporation entered into a contract which became effective October 1, 1914, and which provided that the Southern Cotton Oil Co. would pack United Profit Sharing Coupons with their Snowdrift shortening and their Wesson salad oil.

In July, 1915, after having packed United Coupons with all Snowdrift and Wesson oil for a little less than one year, the Southern Cotton Oil Co. served notice on the United Profit Sharing Corporation that they would no longer pack United Profit Sharing Coupons with Snowdrift or Wesson oil. The United Profit Sharing Corporation, in the United States District Court for the District of New Jersey, sitting as a Court of Equity, asked for an injunction to restrain the Southern Cotton Oil Co. from shipping out any Snowdrift or Wesson oil with which United Profit Sharing Coupons were not packed.

Judge John Rellstab, in the United States District Court for the District of New Jersey, sitting as a Court of Equity, on Monday, September 13th, denied the application of the United Profit Sharing Corporation for a temporary injunction to compel the Southern Cotton Oil Co. to pack its coupons with Snowdrift shortening and Wesson salad oil.

There is a lively dispute between the two companies. The Cotton Oil Co. say the Profit Sharing Corporation sold its coupons to be used by retailers in a way contrary to its agreement, but the Profit Sharing Corporation say the real reason the Cotton Oil Co. stopped using the stamps was because a Southern Retail Grocers' Association, which had taken umbrage at the coupons, showed opposition.

New York Specialty Manufacturers Devise New Scheme Handling Specialty Orders. New Food Official Tells What He Will Do. Various Items and Market Summary

Special Correspondence of "Modern Merchant and Grocery World."

New York, N. Y.,

September 17, 1915.

The Greater New York Auxiliary of the American Specialty Manufacturers' Association is about to launch a new plan of getting specialty orders obtained by its salesmen handled by the jobbing houses. The specialty manufacturers are not satisfied with the way in which these orders have been handled, although they admit that all of the fault does not lie with the jobbers.

Under the new plan the office of the American Specialty Manufacturers' Association is made a clearing house for all specialty orders. Attached to every order turned in by manufacturer or his salesmen is a slip reading as follows:—

This order guaranteed genuine. If buyer refuses to accept any or all of these goods on delivery, please return this order with full information to American Specialty Manufacturers' Association, 100 Hudson street, New York City.

This slip to remain attached to this order until goods are shipped, and then returned to American Specialty Manufacturers' Association, 100 Hudson street, New York City.

Date mailed to jobber.....
Date accepted.....
Date declined.....
Try again.....
Date Goods Are Shipped.....
Jobber.....
Order No..... Member's No.....

The jobber is requested to fill in the slip and mail to the Specialty Manufacturers' Association office daily, in envelopes to be furnished for the purpose, numbered serially, containing the following notations:

If Accepted.—Please enter date of acceptance and pass order with slip to the shipping department, with the request to fill in date when goods are shipped. Then detach slip and drop it in addressed envelope furnished by the association. If the order is only partially filled and the balance of the goods are to be shipped later, proper notation should be made on the acceptance slip.

If Declined.—Please fill in date declined and return order and slip in envelope supplied by the association.

Probable Acceptance.—If credit can be approved within five days, and the order filled within seven days, please hold the order. If it cannot be accepted and entered for delivery within five days, please fill in the "try again" date or decline the order and return both the order and slip to the association.

Canceled Orders.—Should the purchaser cancel the order before shipment, please return order with slip and give reason for cancellation.

Refused Orders.—Where purchasers refuse to accept all or any part of the order on delivery, please return the order with full information as proper record will be kept of all cancellations and rejections, with a view to discouraging them.

Please do not deface any order returned to the association.

The Manufacturers' Representatives, Inc., held its annual outing last week, carrying about 100 people on a private yacht to a resort on Long Island Sound. It was one of the most successful affairs ever held. The outing committee consisted of J. H. Kampf, of the Van Camp Packing Co.; R. Warner, of the H-O Co., and John Herter, of Beh & Herter.

One of the principal events was a ball game between the "Van Camp's" and the "Not-a-Seed's."

There has been considerable speculation among the trade here to prices which the California Almond Growers' Exchange would name on 1915 almonds. The quotations were made during the week and were as follows: 15 cents in a large way for Nonpareils, 13 cents for I. X. L., 13 cents for Plus Ultras, 11 cents for Drak 11 cents for Lanquedocs, 8½ cents for Hardshells.

These prices are f. o. b. the Coast and a rebate of ½ cent will be allowed on orders confirmed at our Prices are maintained against decline until January 1, 1916. The prices are lower than the trade expected, as some outside packers have been offering Nonpareils this market at 17½ cents. The coming yield is expected to be one of the largest on record.

Another statement of the food situation was issued during the week by Dr. Lucius P. Brown, who was formerly Food Commissioner of Tennessee, but who resigned that position to become the Chief of the Food Bureau of the New York City Department of Health.

Dr. Brown brings a new broom North with him and intends to work things up here. The statement which he issued states how:—

In the restaurants here is a great deal to be done. Conditions are very bad indeed, particularly in case of the cheaper grades. A good many foods go into public assumption which should never be there, foods which are not only at their time limit for freshness, but have begun to go down hill. Whenever such foods as these are covered in a restaurant, prosecution is ordered, for the reason that restaurant keeper doesn't keep them unless he thinks he can destroy the odor by cooking and then serve them on his tables.

We are working just now on ice cream manufacturing places, and particularly on hotel kitchens and restaurants. Our efforts in both these lines will be continued until these places are all satisfactory to us.

We shall not neglect keeping these places in the condition in which they at present exist, but we will certainly clean up the restaurants and ice cream manufactories before we stop.

New York's food problems appear to arise from congestion and from the character of the population.

All countries contribute to food supply. Therefore, it is to take hold of the place where food comes in, that is, docks, railroad terminals and large markets. It shows that these places will be closely watched. The largest dealers by virtue of their very bigness, to the community a greater than the little pushcart man or the little grocer.

This is for the double reason that he receives possibly a larger proportion and being a taxpayer, he expects to get more for his money. We are here to see that he gets the way of protection for himself and others from bad foods of description. If, therefore, there is any of these large dealers wrong, we may expect to lead the way in correction. The small man, after the men have gotten into line, will not then complain either that the stuffs which he gets from the man are of poor quality, or that the large dealer is favored by prosecution or inspection.

The small dealer will therefore have no excuse for any petty theft or any uncleanness which he indulges in. I am glad to say so far the large dealers with whom I have come in contact have given us their very heartiest co-operation. This is to be expected, they cannot afford to take a chance on account of the magnitude of their interests, and as already stated, it is very greatly in their interest to co-operate with us for the double reason of insuring by action freedom from prosecution and for a very much more important trade reason, namely, that the food and drug laws are thoroughly enforced, no illicit or illegal competition can flourish, and every one will know approximately what his competitor is handling in the way of foodstuffs.

SUMMARIZED MARKET CONDITIONS.

quiet but in fair demand at aged prices. Cheap grades are good and easy.—Coffee still quiet and quiet. Market shows slight improvement during week, but the closing is weaker. Unchanged on low basis.—Wheat unsettled and lower, granulating at 5.30. Raws also lower on basis of about 4.39.—Prunes irregular and neglected. Other dried fruits dull at ruling quotations. Apricots firm. Currants slightly easier.—Tomatoes strong on unfavorable crop reports. Packers holding Maryland 3s for 80 cents f. o. b. in a large way. Other canned goods quiet. Corn strong on account of bad weather.—Salmon quiet at about unchanged prices. Spot Alaska salmon working up. Tuna fish higher.

Iowa to Have a Mail Order Grocery House.

Work has been started in Marshalltown, Iowa, on the organization of a stock company which will operate a wholesale grocery, selling direct to the consumer, on the same plan as adopted by Chicago mail order houses. N. T. Evans, of Marshalltown, is in charge of the work of organization. Associated with him are his cousin, C. W. Clink, of Amboy; Ill., George W. Davis, of Monticello, and some local men who, at this time, for business reasons, do not wish their identity known. It is planned by the organizers to get their company perfected, articles filed and ready to begin business by October 1st or November 1st.

AMONG THE TRADE.

The receiver of P. F. Brown & Co., defunct wholesale butter and egg concern, has been granted leave to run the business for two months more.

Steady Dry Goods Business.

Marshall Field & Co., in their weekly review of the dry goods trade, say:—

Wholesale distribution of dry goods is maintaining a steady volume, although not as large as a year ago, at which time the anticipated scarcity of foreign merchandise was resulting in large demand for imported lines.

Our retail sales are heavy, although the warm weather has been unseasonable for the sale of fall merchandise.

Visiting buyers number about the same as a year ago, and collections are normal.

The Grocery Markets

Sugar.

Sugar has dropped again during the week and practically all refiners are now quoting granulated at 5.20-5.30. The main reason for this is the presence of domestic beet granulated throughout the East at a uniform price of 5.10 per pound. The California people are selling 20 points below the Eastern price and paying the freight as far East as Philadelphia. The Eastern refiners are feeling this competition very keenly and probably will not be able to advance their prices while it continues. Raws are also inclined to be weaker and the general situation is not firmer. Raws are averaging 4.39.

Tea.

The tea market shows no change for the week, but the situation generally is firm. There will undoubtedly be a shortage in China teas and also in Japans for this season, as the shipments so far made, and likely to be made, show no probability of equaling last year. There is some poor tea about, which is weak because it is not wanted. The consumptive demand for tea is fair.

Coffee.

The coffee market is a trifle firmer for the week although closing is a trifle weak. The steadier feeling appears to come from the slightly better demand. All grades of Rio and Santos are unchanged on last week's basis. Milds are unchanged also, and look like good property on the present basis. Java and Mocha unchanged for the week. The consumptive demand for coffee is fair for the season.

Fish.

Norway mackerel are being held by most holders at about a dollar a barrel higher than a week ago. The reason is continued scarcity on spot and the naming of exceedingly high prices for new fish. These prices in a large way are as follows: No. 1s, $33; No. 2s, $29; No. 3s, $26; No. 4s, $23, and No. 5s, $17. This is from $4 to $6 per barrel higher than the spot price and it is going to be very difficult to sell Norway mackerel in this country at all if these figures are to be maintained. Cod, hake and haddock are all very dull on account of the weather. Domestic sardines unchanged and quiet on the previously reported low basis of price. Imported sardines firm and unchanged. Prices on new salmon have been named on a basis of $1.50 for Red Alaska in a large way f. o. b. the Coast. This is about 7½ cents higher than the spot price.

Canned Goods.

Tomatoes have taken another advance and are now held by most holders at 80 cents for Maryland 3s f. o. b. factory in a large way. The packing outlook is said to be very bad in spite of the hot weather, and buyers are beginning to believe that the market may go even higher. The demand is very fair. The hot weather is burning up the corn in the fields and while this has not yet had an effect upon the market, it may do so if continued. The pa in Maine will undoubtedly be short. Peas are still dull and heavy. Apples unchanged and quiet. California canned goods in light demand at ruling prices, as are some Eastern staple canned goods.

Syrup and Molasses.

Glucose remains unchanged for the week. Compound syrup is quiet at ruling prices. Sugar syrup and molasses are both unchanged and dull.

Dried Fruits.

Prunes show no change for the week and are neglected so far. The spot demand is concerned. The California Raisin Association has guaranteed that its prices on seed raisins, which will be forthcoming shortly, will be higher than a year ago. Other dried fruits—peaches, apricots, currants, etc., are in very light, seasonable demand at unchanged prices.

Beans and Peas.

Pea beans are unchanged for the last week, the situation being steady to firm on account of small stock. The demand is fair. Marrows are still firm and high on last week's basis; scarcity is the reason. California limas are working up a w a shade higher than a week, although there is apparently good reason why they should. Green and Scotch peas are unchanged and quiet, the price of an appearing to be somewhat settled.

Butter.

The butter market is firm at a decline of 1 cent per pound with a consumptive demand. The average quality of the receipts is good and the market is healthy throughout on the present basis. With cooler weather, which should be very shortly, there will likely be higher prices.

Eggs.

Fresh eggs continue very scarce. The market is firm at an advance of 1 cent per dozen. There is active consumptive demand which absorbs all of the receipts on arrival. The undertone and the outlook are healthy, with no immediate change in sight.

Cheese.

The cheese market is firm at an advance of a half cent per pound with an increased consumptive demand. The make of cheese is good for the season and receipts are clean up on arrival. The market is healthy and no disturbing influences are in sight.

Provisions.

Cuts of smoked meats are steady and unchanged, with a moderate consumptive demand. Pure compound lard are in normal consumptive demand at an advance of 1/4 cent. Barreled pork, beef and canned meats are all unchanged and in moderate demand.

INDIVIDUAL MARKET REPORTS.

Imported Fish Specialties.

Agent in Holland reports that there has been quite a normal herring market during the past week and only continued European demand for dried herrings has caused the prices to advance further. To import a barrel of Holland herrings of ordinary quality (not by any means the best) it would cost about $20, which will, of course, make these goods very unsalable here in the American market.

Fishing up to date in Holland is about 141,000 barrels, against about 165,000 barrels at the same time last season, when the auction in Holland was about 28 guilders, or 50 1/2 guilders to-day.

We have no fishing reports from our agents in Scotland, but the scarcity of herrings shows that the same conditions prevail in Scotland as in Holland and there is an enormous demand for herrings at simply enormous prices. The situation in Norway on herrings is unchanged, and prices seem to be going higher, although they are all well as high as they were last year at the same time.

Prices for stockfish this season are, of course, very much higher than they were last season, and supplies are very short and very little is obtainable. Some grades of stockfish are absolutely unobtainable. Of course, there will be some demand for these goods from the trade that is used to having them, but of course the demand will naturally be curtailed.

There has been no change since our last report in the Norwegian sardine situation. The demand continues very good, but unfortunately, supplies are practically unobtainable, at least not obtainable at prices which will allow us to import the goods and sell them at a profit. Stocks here will gradually become exhausted, and prices already show a natural advance in sympathy with the high prices prevailing on the other side.

From France, of course, we do not expect any sardines, except a few small lots here and there, for which we have to pay an enormous price to get them at all. In Portugal they seem to be catching some small fish, but the prices are so enormously high that we are afraid to import the goods, because we could not sell them at a profit, so we have to be satisfied to sell what stocks we have here, and wait patiently for what the near future will bring.

STROHMEYER & ARPE Co.
New York.

Standard Canned Goods.

Weather conditions during the week were decidedly more favorable for growing tomatoes, but the farmers are unhappy over the situation as it exists to date. According to the U. S. Government statistics, the month of August was the wettest on record since the establishment of the Weather Bureau, and the temperature averaged the lowest ever recorded in the same month. There was a continuation of these conditions during the first week of September, but the long-wished-for change came last week, with less rain and a higher temperature. The farmers claim, however, that this very sudden change will do more harm than good, for the reason that the tomatoes now on vines are water logged and the hot sun will cause them to crack and bleed and render a large proportion of the fruit unsuitable for canning purposes. If this is true, as claimed by experts, that the excessive rains and heavy hailstorms in August caused the loss of the blossoms that were expected to produce the late fruit, in September and October, then the tomato crop is in a serious condition throughout this section of the country, which produces annually, say, one-fourth of the canned tomatoes produced in the United States. But—and there is always a “but” to every proposition—tomatoes are said to have nine lives, like the proverbial cat, and they may yet come back.

There was an excellent buying of tomatoes again this week, in fair-sized lots, and the shipments were widely scattered, same as heretofore. The canners continue to be quite firm in their views as to the future course of the market prices, and the sudden advance, overnight, this week in No. 10s, from $1.90 per dozen to $2.40, encourages them in their belief. Sudden advances, like that, for instance, oftentimes are detrimental in their effects, especially when they occur before the canning season is half over. Enough, perhaps, is already known about the crop to date to cause the canners to believe that the output this season will fall much below the production in 1914 or 1913, and that is the apparent basis of the present firmness in the quotations. It is believed that any weakness in prices during September, should it occur, will find alert buyers ready to take on larger quantities without hesitation.

Intending buyers of fancy quality corn, shoepeg or Maine style, would do well to look after the goods at once. For the reasons stated in our previous letters, each of these two grades of fancy corn will be a scarce article next winter, most likely. There may or may not be a sufficient pack of these two varieties of standard grades, but the belief at this time is that there will be a shortage in them, too, as compared with the output in the two previous seasons. The other lines of vegetables lacked that snap, or ginger, which is usually in evidence during the month of September. String beans, wax beans and sweet potatoes were a little bit more active than the other items of vegetables, but that is not saying very much for any of them.

The bargain counter prices for unpeeled pie peaches, as well as for seconds table peaches are attracting orders for those two grades, but there is very little buying of the other grades of them. Lovers of fancy, high-flavored yellow peaches packed in syrup that is heavy enough to keep the flavor at the right sweetness, without having the dead-sweet taste of sugar rather than fruit, will find in Baltimore what they are looking for—the old-time Maryland yellow peaches. There have been a few pears packed during the last ten days, but the pear crop does not usually mature until the last of September or October. The summer crop of apples is never an important factor in the canning trade, and the canners do not expect anything big in point of quantity until the fall crop is ripe and ready. There was a very small business done in the other fruits, berries, cherries, pineapples, etc., being almost at a standstill during the week. When the fall demand opens up these items will be active enough, doubtless.

Cove oysters are unchanged; demand light, prices firm.

Rice.

The improvement noted last week continues, and an increased volume of business is reported. Prices ruling strong and slightly higher on first cost. Warehouse holdings of old crop are greatly depleted, and as fresh arrivals are only in moderate quantity and in the main sold to "arrive" or from dock, spot stocks are smaller than for many seasons at equal date. There has been some little interest in new crop Blue Rose, but the offerings are extremely limited and prices are firmly held.

Advices from the South along the Atlantic coast report that trade is gradually improving and with the offerings of new crop rice and the small stocks in dealers' hands, a steady trade from now on is anticipated. A general movement of Carolina is looked for in about two weeks, although a small lot is expected in a day or two.

At New Orleans the market shows a very healthy demand for all grades. Prices on clean are strong and firmly maintained. Several lots of river rough brought exceptionally high prices, which tends to confirm our advice that the fancy river rices are becoming scarce.

In the Interior, Southwest Louisiana, Texas and Arkansas, a few mills have started up in Louisiana and Texas mills contemplate operating within the next few days.

Spices.

The market is more active, with a very lively spot demand for many articles. Stocks continue small and the assortment is very narrow. Our demand is likely to increase during this month and in October. Foreign markets being higher, it is reasonable to expect sharp advances here.

Pepper.—More active. Demand has been very good. Higher prices are expected on all grades of black peppers. White peppers are unchanged.

Red Peppers.—Are in very good demand and are likely to remain high during this year.

Cloves.—Very scarce and in active demand. Spot prices are higher.

Pimento (Allspice).—Steady and in fair spot demand. The assortment is unsatisfactory.

Mace.—In increased demand. Supply here very narrow and it is difficult to secure better grades.

Nutmegs.—In very active demand, with a short stock here. We expect to see this article go higher.

Gingers.—The demand is very good. Prices are likely to advance.

Green Ginger Root.—In very good demand, though the supply is better at this time than during the early summer. Prices are slightly easier.

Tapiocas.—Very much firmer and in good, active demand.

Paprikas.—The market is more active and the limited stocks here are being taken up rapidly. Prices are holding steady.

Seeds, Herbs, Etc.—Many articles very active in the list. Cummin seed has advanced sharply on renewed demand. Yellow mustard seeds are also higher. Coriander is holding firm at the recent advance. Sage and sweet herbs in fair demand at steady prices.

MARKET NOTES.

Peaches have a wide range—15 to 90 cents per basket. While fruit is scarce, the average quality of the present receipts is good.

Grapes are bringing 10 cents a pony basket; receipts are mostly from New Jersey and Delaware.

New sweet potatoes are cheap—35 cents per basket, against 40 to 45 cents a year ago. Southern sweets are about done.

The first new Florida oranges reached Northern markets during the week. In spite of the high prices of Californias, they brought only about $1 per box. They were green, though sweet.

Porto Rico grapefruit is now coming in and rules at $4 to $6. A few Floridas have gone to New York, but the trade were not much interested.

Tomatoes are about unchanged, in spite of the hot and dry weather, which is favorable to growing tomatoes.

Prices range from 20 to 40 cents, canners paying 20 to 22 cents, against 12 to 15 cents last year. This makes the cost of packing quite high.

Pineapples got too ripe, and as they had to be pressed for sale, the price sharply declined.

Package Coffee Gains Weight by Being Held.

Interesting Experiment Both With Whole and Ground Coffee Shows That Absorption of Moisture Causes Rapid Increase in Weight. Coffee Packed in Tin Increases Much More Slowly.

Not long ago a couple of New York food chemists undertook to find out what happened to package coffee when it was stored and kept for a time. The chemists were R. E. Doolittle and Burnett B. Wright, of the New York Laboratory, Bureau of Chemistry, and their conclusions, besides being authoritative, are interesting.

This investigation was undertaken for the purpose of determining the effect of storage on the gain or loss in weight of freshly roasted coffee, prepared, transported and stored under ordinary commercial conditions. During the latter part of the month of July 847 packages, each containing exactly one pound of freshly roasted coffee were packed and distributed in the following manner: 168 packages to New Orleans, La., by the Southern Pacific Steamship Co., 168 packages to Chicago by railroad, 168 packages to Denver by railroad, 343 packages stored in an unheated warehouse in New York City. The 168 packages shipped to New Orleans, Chicago and Denver were identical with the 168 packages reserved in New York, and consisted of medium roasted Santos coffee.

Seventy-two packages in each instance were paper bags with paraffine paper lining, 36 of which contained the coffee in the whole bean and 36 in the medium ground condition. Seventy-two packages were cardboard cartons enclosing a paraffine paper bag, 36 of which were filled with the roasted beans and 36 with the medium ground coffee. Twenty-four packages were tin cans, 12 of which contained the whole beans, and 12 the medium ground coffee. The packages shipped to New Orleans, Chicago and Denver were reweighed immediately on reaching their destination and approximately every two weeks thereafter until the following December, after which they were weighed once each month. Similar weighings were made on the samples stored in New York City.

It will be noted in the first place that there was an increase over the original weight in all samples and at all weighings. The paper bags and pasteboard cartons show a very rapid increase at first, the maximum for the first twelve months being reached within fourteen weeks. As would be expected, the coffee contained in the cardboard cartons absorbs moisture a little slower than that in the paper bags, but in general the results on these two forms of packages show very uniform changes throughout the experiment. In the case of the tin can packages, while there is an increase in weight, this increase is much slower and more uniform and the maximum is not reached within a year, in fact, the maximum has probably not been reached in the period covered by this experiment, namely, sixty weeks.

Comparisons show that in most cases there was a greater increase in weight in the whole beans than in the ground coffee. It was found in the course of the investigation, however, that the paper bags became saturated with the oil from the coffee and the cartons partially saturated. This condition undoubtedly affected the tare of the containers and thereby influenced the results in some cases. Furthermore, this oil, by clogging the pores of the containers and preventing the easy passage of the moisture, to a certain extent may have affected the change; also the oil if easily volatilized would give a further loss in weight. This may account for the difference between the whole and ground coffee in the paper bags and the cardboard cartons. This condition of course did not occur in the case of the tin can packages.

The seasonal changes are also interesting. It will be noted in the paper bags and cartons the maximum increase in weight were reached in the fall months, namely, September and October. During the winter months there is a loss from the weight during the fall months, while during the spring and summer there is very little change, the rise beginning in the late summer and fall. Apparently, the coffee in the sealed tin cans is not greatly affected by the varying moisture conditions of the different seasons.

THESE MANUFACTURERS WILL GRATUITOUSLY SEND RETAILERS ADVERTISING AND DISPLAY MATTER.

Seeing a Business Die Before Your Eyes.

It must be a blame tough thing to live with somebody and see 'em dying right before your eyes. That happens every day to some people and it's always seemed to me that it's pretty near the limit.

But there's another thing pretty near as bad, and that's to live with a business and see it dying right before your eyes.

Specially when it didn't need to die at all. It ain't so bad when you've done everything you can think of and none of it's done any good. If the thing's simply got to die and nothing in heaven or earth can stop it—well, you can stand it then, but when it's dying just because it ain't getting the right treatment, that's enough to set you wild. Specially after it's dead, as you sit back and look at it—by George!

I was in a store last week where the business is dying just because it ain't getting the right treatment. As a doctor, I'm a joke, maybe, but I could save that business. So could anybody with a spoonful of sense.

That business has been great. It could be now if only there was somebody who could take the people that own it by the seat of their pants and kick some gump-tion into 'em. Tell you the truth, I get so mad when I go in there that I don't get over it for the rest of the day. It's so blamed unnecessary.

This store is owned by an old man maybe sixty or sixty-five years old. He's feeling his age a bit, but not so as to put him in the discard at all. He has three clerks, one of 'em his own boy. It's the boy that's chiefly to blame for this thing. He's either the biggest boob that ever lived, or he hates the grocery business and ain't willing to do a tap to save his father's store. I ain't ever been able to figure out which it is.

The worst way the business is run down is in the stock. The old man's some forgetful and he says he depends on his boy to tell him what's needed. The boy is either forgetful, too, or he don't give a ding. Between 'em the stock's got to be a remnant.

Why while I was in there the other day a woman came in for some ginger. There wasn't a bit in the place! Wouldn't that eat holes in your socks? Ginger—get on to that!

I suppose I've seen the clerks go out twenty times to another store around the corner and buy little orders for customers that they didn't have in stock, though they ought to have had. Just let run out. Of course there's a big bunch of profit in that sort of thing, ain't there?

Not a bit of this needs to be, you know. All rotten bad management.

Last spring a woman gave 'em thunder right before me and a lot of other people. She wanted some Rumford baking powder—they always had it and she'd been getting it there for years. She said so in the store.

"Mr. Jones, what did you send me ——— baking powder for?" she said to the boss. "You know I never use that—Rumford is what I always get."

"We didn't have any Rumford," said the old man.

"What difference does that make?" she said. "I don't want ——— all the same. Why haven't you got Rumford—aren't you going to keep it any more?"

"Oh, yes, we'll get it in again," he said.

"When?"

"Why, in a day or two—why wasn't that ordered, Bill?" Bill's the son.

"How do I know? I told you about it a week ago."

"What did you do that for? Why didn't you go ahead and order it yourself—it's regular stock."

The fuss didn't get anywhere of course—there was nowhere for it to get.

"It does seem to me, Mr. Jones," said the woman, "as if you weren't half attending to your store. Why don't you keep up your stock? This is the third or fourth time you've sent me things I didn't order, or told me you were just out. You'll simply drive me away if you don't do better." Then she went out.

The worst thing about the whole thing to me is that this old man, who has got to where he has a right to ease up some, has got this thing for a son. He ought to tie a gimlet on the end of his shoe and kick the boy where the Lord meant him to be kicked, say fifty times, each time saying: "I'm handing you these because you ain't doing what you should by your father and business." Then when the man's through, the boy ought to tie the gimlet on his shoe, and let his dad have it, say ten times, say each time: "You're getting this because you ain't got sense enough to kick me out and get a live wife in to run the business."

Maybe after that everything would be better. I'd even buy a gimlet out of my own pocket.

Jersey cantaloupes have been poor; in fact, most cantaloupes have been poor this year. No Colorado Rocky Fords have reached Philadelphia as yet, though they have New York. Selling for $1.50 for flats and $4 for California cantaloupes packed in flats are extremely high—$1.75 for melons. The excessive rains are responsible for the poor quality.

Selling Talks With Clerks

BY A MAN WHO HAS BEEN ONE

Conducted by W. E. SWEENEY, Manager for L. Lehman & Co.'s Department Food Store, Dover, N. J.

Carrying a Basket.—In a few cities, notably Philadelphia, Pa., it is considered perfectly proper for a woman to go shopping with a basket. In the majority of towns, however, it is considered "perfectly shocking."

If we grocers could only revive the basket habit it would prove a big saving of time, bags, paper and twine.

Even the farmers nowadays want their things put in a "big bag." These 25 and 35-pound kraft bags are expensive, and it is up to you to discourage their use by substituting large sheets of heavy paper, which really makes a better looking package.

Advertising Space.—Do you know that the shelves right back of your grocery counter is the best advertising space in the store? It's like standing sideways in a trolley with your eyes in line with the car ads. It's all you have to look at.

These lower shelves should be used for profitable goods, with large, attractive, easy reading signs and changed often.

For instance, if you run private brands of coffee or tea put up in advance in your colored bags, that's very place to put them.

We have too much regulation about our shelf arrangement. We want a lot of nice looking bottled goods up front and often a line of imported stuff. The average person buys only for special occasions. This is one of the set backs we can well afford to get away from. Anyway, it will be interesting to watch the result of your new "advertising space."

The Firm First.—Safety first is good, but the customer first is better, but the first is best.

No fellow can reasonably hope to get ahead unless he has the true interest of his firm constantly at heart. As a matter of fact, it pays, pays you personally—because "whatever we give to the world the world gives back to us."

If you don't assist in every honorable way to make money for the firm, you are dead wood. But if you are firm and live up to "firm first," you are doing noble work, and your services can not easily be dispensed with.

SUN-KIST Seeded Raisins are NOT PACKED by any association or combination of growers or packers like thousands of other brands are. They ARE PACKED by the owners of the SUN-KIST Brand, who have absolute control of the quality and who cater to the desires of particular people.

BURK'S Meat Loaf

SEASONABLE THROUGHOUT THE YEAR

Composed entirely of fine selected meats—contains no flour or cereals. Baked fresh daily in loaves of about six pounds.

Makes a quick and delicious breakfast sliced and fried in a little butter.

Can also be served cold for luncheon, cut in thin slices or warmed in the oven in one piece to take the place of a roast.

BURK'S Lunch Roll

(Copyrighted)

SUBSTITUTE FOR BOILED HAM

Composed of lean, tender pieces of pork, mildly cured, stuffed in linen container and boiled.

Far superior and more delicious than boneless boiled ham, being juicy, mild and sweet; also less expensive and not near so wasteful—in fact no waste at all. Much finer in texture and just as easily sliced, or more so, as this can be done in a slicing machine.

The cover is readily removed by cutting the seam and then stripping off the sack as the roll is consumed. This prevents it becoming dry and is a sanitary feature that appeals to the consumer, as it keeps the product clean while displayed on the counter and untouched by hand while slicing, a vast improvement as compared with handling the greasy, unprotected boneless boiled ham.

MEAT LOAF and LUNCH ROLL were originated by us, now imitated by others, but none equal to Burk's, which are prepared from only the choicest materials.

329.—A Point About the Stevens Bill of Great Importance to Every Merchant.

Very probably one of the hottest fights ever had over legislation in Congress will be over the Stevens bill at the next Congressional session. I have made some references to the Stevens bill in previous articles. It is being largely promoted by manufacturers of trade-marked specialties like the Ingersoll watch, and Kellogg's Toasted Corn Flakes, who have organized under the name of the American Fair Trade League and are maintaining an office in New York City for the distribution of propaganda over the entire United States.

In a nutshell the Stevens bill would give a manufacturer legal authority to tell the jobber and the retailer through whom his goods are distributed, what price they should get for his product. It is destined to destroy the cutter, and very largely quantity prices as well.

In the discussion which the Stevens bill has elicited, many objections have been raised to it, some of which have been foolish, not meriting answer; and others of which have been plausible, but have been successfully answered by the manufacturers. One objection, however, has not been answered in a way which carries any weight. Because it is in my judgment an objection of force, I shall say a little about it here.

It is the objection that the Stevens bill would prevent a retailer from cleaning up his stock. It is part of every retailer's experience that odds and ends of stock will accumulate and if they are to be gotten rid of, they must be cut in price and pushed out. This is one legitimate form of price-cutting, in my judgment, and I heard a seasoned old merchant say the other day that it was impossible to successfully run a retail store without it.

The Stevens bill as now written would unquestionably prevent a merchant from cutting the prices of these odds and ends of stock, or from cutting the price of any stock which he found would not sell, and which he therefore wished to get rid of, if such stock were not damaged. The American Fair Trade League says the bill would not prevent this, but the League is wrong. The secretary of the League thus recently set forth this objection to the bill, and the League's answer:

THE OBJECTION.

6. "Maintained prices would prevent important seasonable reductions in prices upon which most housewives depend—especially those with limited means."

THE ANSWER.

Maintained prices, as legalized in the Stevens Bill will do nothing of the sort; the Stevens Bill expressly provides that in case of deteriorated goods, the dealer may sell them at any price he chooses, provided he has first given the manufacturer an opportunity to take them off his hands at what they cost him.

It is true that the Stevens bill contains a clause allowing a retailer owning goods which are "damaged, deteriorated, or soiled" to cut them, after he has first offered them to the manufacturer and the manufacturer has refused to take them back at the price paid. But that has nothing to do with this case. The bill provides that a merchant may cut the price of an article if such an article of commerce or contents of such carton, package or other receptacle shall have become damaged, deteriorated or soiled; Provided, That such damaged, deteriorated or soiled article shall have first been offered to the vendor by such dealer by written offer, at the price paid for the same by such dealer, and that such vendor, after reasonable opportunity to inspect such article or articles, shall have refused or neglected to accept such offer, and that such damaged, deteriorated or soiled article shall thereafter only be offered for sale by such dealer with prominent notice to the purchaser that such article is damaged, deteriorated or soiled, and that the price thereof is reduced because of such damage.

The secretary of the American Fair Trade League says goods which a retailer wishes to reduce in order to get rid of, are "deteriorated" under the law, and can therefore be cut in price if the manufacturer refuses to buy them back. He is wrong. "Deteriorated" under this bill, as now framed, would not mean that at all. It would mean deteriorated only in the sense of being physically injured, as by becoming shopworn. This is under this familiar and fundamental rule of law which any lawyer knows: that when a law uses a number of expressions, all in connection with the same subject, the meaning of any one of them (which might ordinarily be much wider) is limited by the meaning of the words with which it is used. A case in point is a certain law which provided that certain obligations should be borne by "a mechanic, miner or other person." Ordinarily "other person" would mean anybody, but the court in this case held that "other person" meant other persons similar or like unto mechanics and miners, and that it did not include a farmer. There are many similar cases.

"Deteriorated" goods under this act would therefore mean goods to which something had happened similar to becoming "damaged" or "soiled." Merchandise that had simply not sold well for a given merchant would not be "deteriorated" even in the ordinary use of that word. And in the legal sense of the word it would not come within a mile of being "deteriorated," and its price could never be cut without the manufacturer's consent.

Much can be said for the Stevens bill in many ways, both in letter and in spirit, but this part of it was in my judgment practically despicable what every merchant can consider his fundamental right, viz: right to make special concessions on merchandise whose room he proposes to its company. The bill could easily be amended so that it would not be open to this objection, if promoters really intend not to interfere with this function of a merchant.

(Copyright, September, 1915, by Elton J. Buckley.)

Question: F. A. Crabtree, Bi Va.—Please give us your opinion what is best to do on inclosed tract. These parties sold our acceptances and refuse to answer letters. We have no sale on the goods; we have one payment. As we understand the contract they are to take back all unsold goods at the end of the year to meet our payments.

Answer.—This is the scheme of the National Novelty Import Houser Building, St. Louis, and is precisely like several concerns selling jewelry and perfumery concerns run by Western concerns such as the Donald-Richard Co. of City, Iowa. This scheme comprehends selling a retailer a lot of jewelry, taking notes or "acceptances" for it, which notes are to a third party and collected at the end of a year, "if the tract has been complied with," agree to buy back the unsold of the goods. Unlike most of concerns working these schemes the National Novelty Import seem to be financially responsible. However, I predict that when they ask them to buy back the goods they will have a long list of reasons why they cannot do it. They may ignore the matter entirely leaving you to go to St. Louis and sue them. I am afraid that your experience with this scheme is going to be very unsatisfactory.

NOTE.—Requests for information in this department should tersely set in full all the facts bearing on the case and all questions should be carefully framed to avoid misconstruction. Only one side of the sheet only. Letters should be received at this office later than Tuesday of each week, to ensure an answer in the Monday's following. The signature and address of the writer must accompany all inquiries, and will be published unless there is a request not to do so. All inquiries received will be answered without charge. Address all communications to Legal Editor "Modern Merchant and Grocery World."

Weekly Window Display Suggestions

September Rambos.

Let people know you have first-class stuff by having an apple display, for a housekeeper knows what delicious sauce and butter these Rambos make. Cover the bottom of the window with light green crepe paper. Make a pyramid from wood—the size of the pyramid depending on the size of the window, but for a window of ordinary size it should at least be three feet high and about a foot and a half across the base. Cover the pyramid with green crepe paper and stick wire nails without heads all over it, each extending about two inches from the wood. Force an apple on each nail, tight. Arrange the apple pyramid in the middle of the rear of the window. On each side of this place a basket of apples—make a fake bottom and just about two layers of the apples. On a white napkin at each side of the window in front of the baskets, place two bowls, one with apple butter in it and the other with apple sauce in it. Put a sign card like the illustration in front of the window. Run a strip of green crepe paper across the rear background. Cut a piece of white muslin and drape it across the back of the window you have lettered it, fastening it at each end with a rosette and holding it in place at the middle with an extra large apple, fastened on just like the others with a headless nail.

Southern California Association Gets Ready to Stop Selling Groceries.

The Southern California Retail Grocers' Association, after much negotiation with its secretary, N. P. Olsen, has decided on the management of the big chain drug store operated in that region by the Owl Drug Co., has succeeded in persuading the drug concern to quit selling groceries. According to the announcement of the association, no effort was made by the association to force the drug company to stop selling groceries, but the drug company was approached on the friendly ground that it was unfair to the retail grocer for drug houses to buy up odd lots of groceries as Ivory Soap and Dutch Stew and slaughter them merely for the slaughter would make. In a final statement the association says:

Our association believes that there is no demand for an apothecary shop in a grocery store. The contrary should also be true regarding a drug store—a druggist has sufficient trade of his own without attacking the grocery trade by cutting grocery items to cost or below.

It is with great pleasure therefore that we can authoritatively announce that the Owl Drug Co. will in the future refrain from advertising groceries as leaders in selling campaigns.

Far-reaching, beneficial results to grocers in general will result from this voluntary action of this big concern. The Owl Drug Co., with its chain of stores up and down the Pacific coast, is a leader in the retail and wholesale drug business. It is confidently expected that their action will result in a much better feeling between the grocers and "The Owl," and will avert what at one time threatened to be a general trade war.

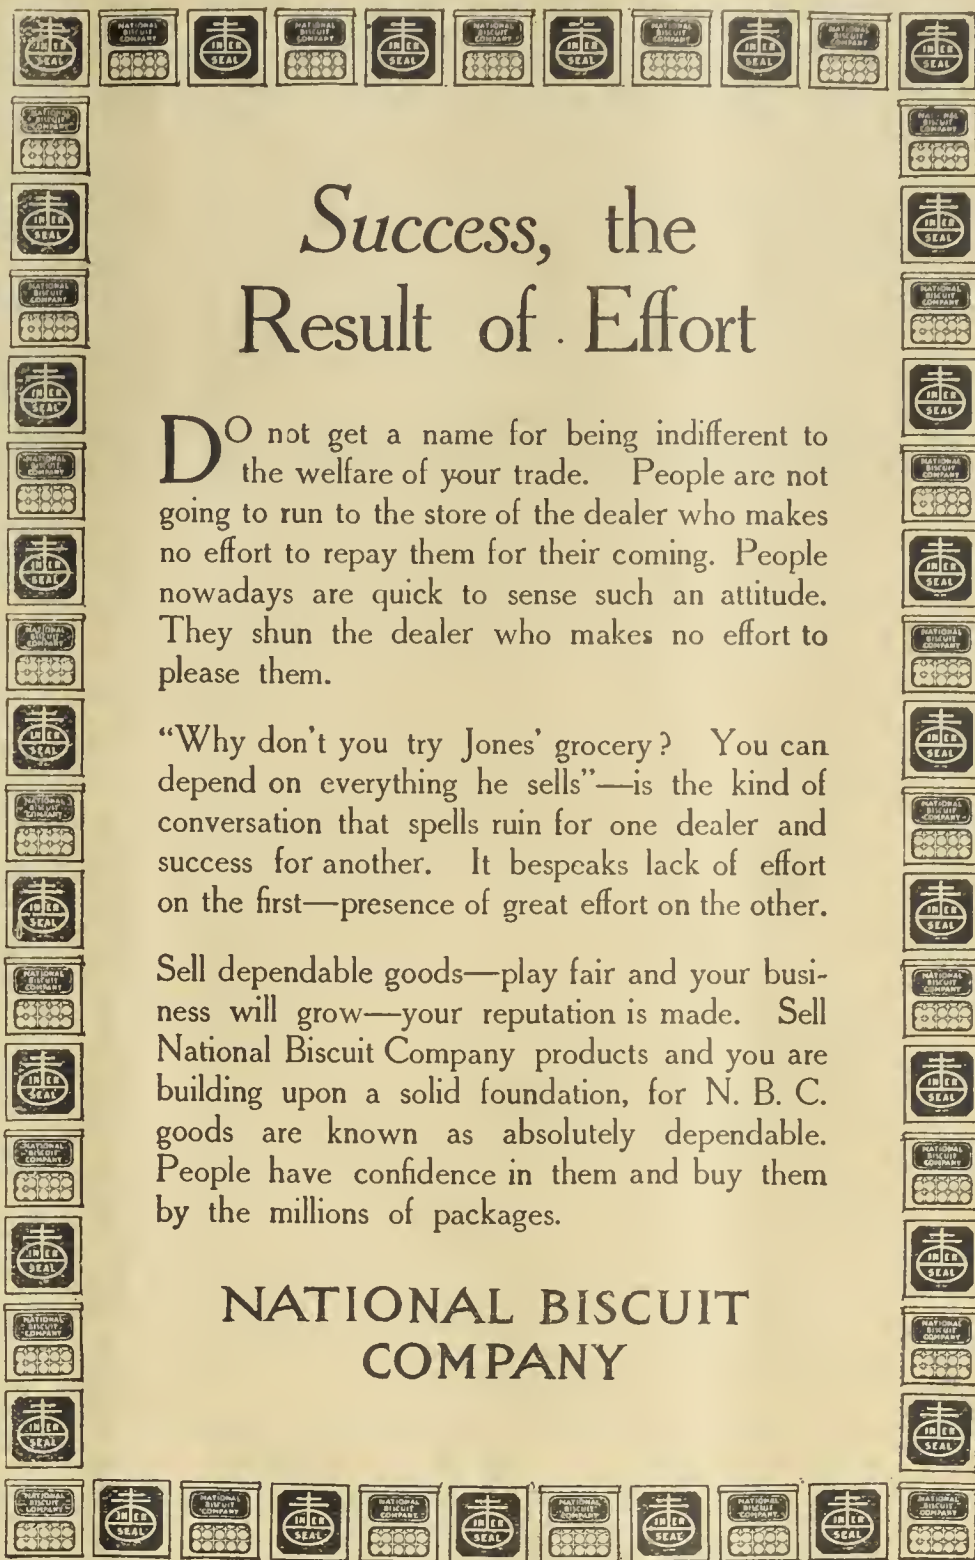

Success, the Result of Effort

Do not get a name for being indifferent to the welfare of your trade. People are not going to run to the store of the dealer who makes no effort to repay them for their coming. People nowadays are quick to sense such an attitude. They shun the dealer who makes no effort to please them.

"Why don't you try Jones' grocery? You can depend on everything he sells"—is the kind of conversation that spells ruin for one dealer and success for another. It bespeaks lack of effort on the first—presence of great effort on the other.

Sell dependable goods—play fair and your business will grow—your reputation is made. Sell National Biscuit Company products and you are building upon a solid foundation, for N. B. C. goods are known as absolutely dependable. People have confidence in them and buy them by the millions of packages.

Here is a new sampling scheme that is worthy of some attention. I say "new," it is at least new to me. I have never seen sampling done in just such a way as this. Pomerantz, the West Philadelphia delicatessen dealer, sends the following blank postal card to his customers. It is evidently mailed in an envelope or delivered by hand; it is the customer's place to put a stamp on it and mail it back:—

he was centrally located, and could advertise for trade from all over the city. Right on this point I have the following letter from John Brayshaw, Jr., of Washington, D. C., who tried it:—

While I am not very partial to the circular method of advertising, my experience has proven it of more benefit than through newspapers and for that reason I continue to use them.

About five years ago I was induced to insert an ad. in one of Circulars or his own little paper for local circulation are best for a local grocer in my judgment.

NOTE.—This department is devoted to the criticism of advertising matter sent in, to the devising of new advertising ideas for special occasions, upon request, and to the suggesting of original advertisements when data is supplied. All communications sent for this Department should be addressed to the Editor of Science of Advertising. They will be taken up in strict rotation.

This seems a good deal of an undertaking. The postal promises to send samples of all the articles named on it, "and other good things to eat." Quite a good deal of stuff for a one-cent stamp. I am considerably curious as to how Pomerantz does it—how much does he send of each of these things? How does he deliver them? What direct results does he get from the scheme as a whole? How does he follow up his samples? By solicitation or by mailing advertising matter? Be a good fellow, Pomerantz, and tell us all this for the general good of the order.

There is always considerable discussion over whether a retail grocer in a city can use the daily papers in any way whatever so as to get anything from them. I have always believed that he could not, unless our daily papers in the section headed "Where to Market," which I kept in for a month, changing copy frequently, and to see whether it would produce results I put in goods for less than I could buy them for in some instances, and sold only at this price when the person called for the advertised price. One article was Campbell's Soup, 7 cents; Challenge Milk, 7 cents, and several other articles as well known, and so far as I ever knew, had but two calls for the soup and one for milk. Clearly this department failed to make good, and it was discontinued shortly after this.

It could hardly be argued that anybody saw Mr. Brayshaw's newspaper advertising; if they had they certainly would have bought—more than three people would, anyway. Naturally, this doesn't prove that if Mr. Brayshaw had taken a large space in the display columns of the paper he wouldn't have gotten better results, but if his is a local neighborhood store, that would have been too expensive.

We Are Using More Canned Hawaiian Pineapple Every Year.

Imports for 1915 Increased Nearly Million and a Half. Packers Now Use All Waste to Make Other Pineapple Products.

Special Correspondence of "Modern Merchant and Grocery World."

Washington, D. C.,

September 15, 1915.

The pineapple production of the Hawaiian Islands for 1915 will approximate 2,500,000 cases of canned product. Years ago the pineapple canneries cored, pared and trimmed the pineapples, and then, slicing the pine, graded it by sizes into cans. The cores, parings and trimmings were treated as refuse and thrown into great piles. These refuse heaps were taken cognizance of by the Board of Health, and as the result of discussions as to methods for destroying same the pineapple companies themselves decided that by-products could be made from the refuse and form a valuable part of the income. The one-time refuse is now converted into a mash from which pineapple juice is extracted, the cores are cut into cubes and used in the manufacture of glace fruit, and to-day no part of the pineapple is lost.

One of the valuable by-products is pineapple vinegar. It is now placed on the market at an average price of 40 cents a gallon. It lacks the "shuddery" effect of ordinary raw vinegar, and it is considered Honolulu housewives to be far superior to other kinds for use in preparation of mayonnaise dressings. The vinegar was first prepared by Byron O. Clark, the pioneer pineapple grower of the Hawaiian Islands, who came to the islands from California in 1898 as a member of an association of American farmers who located at Wahiawa island of Oahu, about 20 miles from Honolulu.

The growers and canners hold their second annual celebration of Hawaiian Pineapple Day on November 10th, about which time the entire United States will be crisscrossed by the large wholesale grocers and agencies.

In the fiscal year ended June 30, 1915, there were imported into the United States from Hawaii 1,160,000 pineapples to the value of $52,000,000. Canned pineapples worth $5,900,000, and preserved or otherwise prepared pines valued at $35,000,000. The corresponding figures for the preceding fiscal twelve months were $115,745, $4,536,919, and $2,000,000, respectively.

Window Display Awards Postponed

We made a mistake fixing September 1st as the end of the Lipton Window Dressing Contest. It's a bad time, when clerks or proprietors are away on their vacations.

So many people have told us this, that we have decided to postpone the award of prizes until

NOVEMBER 1, 1915

The contest is for the five best window displays of Lipton's Tea. Here are the conditions:—

The "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" will give to the five retail dealers who make the most attractive window displays of Lipton's Tea before the end of this contest, the following cash prizes:—

For the Best	-	-	-	-	$75
For the Second	-	-	-	-	$50
For the Third	-	-	-	-	$25
For the Fourth	-	-	-	-	$15
For the Fifth	-	-	-	-	$10

CONDITIONS:

1. The display entered in the contest must be of Lipton's Tea alone.
2. The display must remain in the window one week.
3. Each contestant must send to this office a photograph of his display or a careful detailed description of it. Naturally a picture would be better, though a contestant need not incur that expense if he does not wish to. Almost every family now has a kodak-user in it who could photograph a window display.
4. Each contestant if he decides to enter the contest, will kindly drop this office a postal card to that effect.
5. The contest closes November 1, 1915.

The Subscribers' Bargain List

Have you got any goods you don't want? Anything—canned goods, groceries, hardware, dry goods, anything at all that's in good condition, but won't sell for you.

If you will make a price on it we can probably sell it for you in a hurry. Write us about it, stating the quantity, condition and your best price. You might give the original cost, too. We will give it a key number and offer it to our 4,000 subscribers. Your name will not appear unless you want it to. All sales ought to be on a cash basis.

The point is that what won't sell for you may be in everyday demand for somebody else, who will be glad to get your stock of it at a bargain.

There will be no charge for this service anywhere—we do it to help along.

Yeast and Fleischmann

When your average customer thinks of yeast, she recalls the name Fleischmann.

That's because these two names have been linked together for fifty years, and yeast bearing this name has established itself as clean, fresh, strong and dependable.

How to Make Other Cocoas as Good as Ours

Take the average cocoa on the market and carry it through another process or two, and you may have an article about as good as Croft's Swiss Milk Cocoa.

The trouble is that other manufacturers will not use that "other process or two," because of its cost. They prefer to send out their product half made, as it were—containing indigestible and ill-tasting ingredients which should have been eliminated—so they can save a little on the cost of making.

Croft's Swiss Milk Cocoa has everything taken out that should be taken out, and for that reason, among others, it has the smoothest, finest flavor of any cocoa made.

Will you mention the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" when you write?

Do As They Do

No Economy store buys Coffee through salesmen; nor does it buy through any other middleman. It buys direct from the importer, cutting out every profit that could possibly add to its buying price.

Why don't you, who have to compete with the Economy stores, do the same? Cut out the salesman, whose salary is always added to your buying price, and buy from us (importers) direct by mail? You can't go astray, for you are protected at every point, nor can you fail to save by it. To-day is a good day to send us samples to match.

Get Our Prices on Salesbooks First

We make everything in Salesbooks you can think of—duplicating, triplicating, carbon-coated, single carbon and all of their combinations. All sorts of counter pads, too. You won't find our sort of carbon paper in most books. We specialize in it because the copy is so important.

We sell entirely by mail—get our prices and samples before you place another order. Our books will stand up with anybody's and our prices may please you very much.

Order through your jobber.

THE VALUE OF BRIGHT STORES

The difficulty of making a sale—whether it be dry goods or vegetables, jewelry or shoes—is increased tenfold in a poorly lighted store. Other things being equal, the Electrically lighted shop will do more business than the store which uses other illuminants. "Indoor Daylight" can only be obtained by the use of Mazda Electric lamps.

Any Retailer Who Wants to Can Put a Crimp in the Mail Order Houses

E. Leslie Wildey, the Retailer Who Has Met Them More Successfully Than Almost Any Other, Will Tell the Trade How. Believes in Protest to Manufacturers as the First Step.

At a recent convention of retail merchants, I asked all who had the latest issue of Montgomery Ward's, Sears, Roebuck's, the Larkin Company, and Savage's catalogues to rise.

Two rose in response to this question.

I asked all who had bought as many as three items from the mail-order houses within the last year to please rise.

The same men got up.

Then I said, "If I came into your store with an order for twenty-five dollars' worth of merchandise selected from a mail-order catalogue, how many of you would fill it at catalogue house prices without looking at the order?"

About twenty rose.

"Those who are advertising that fact," I said to them, "be seated."

All sat down but four.

Why were they not doing it, and why were they not meeting the prices?

I don't want you to think I have always been successful in my fight against the mail-order houses, for I haven't. I don't want you to think that the catalogue houses are not shipping in goods to my territory, for they are, but it is not because I don't know about it.

I have talked with a great many merchants, and I find only one here and there who seems to be aware of the inroads of the mail-order houses. They usually minimize the amount of goods they sell and that comes into their territory, but the fact is that thousands of orders are received from our territory every day by the catalogue houses. It is time we put away false pride, and admit that we have been asleep at the switch. It is due to the retailer and the jobber that the business of the mail-order houses has reached its present size and influence, because we have seen abuses creep in and have not lifted our voices in protest.

The work that I have been doing in this fight is work that should have been done by other retailers years ago. Two years ago a man whom I consider the best posted retail hardware man in the United States, addressed the State conventions of four States. He urged those present to write some letters to a half dozen manufacturers whom he named as selling the mail-order dealers. All told three thousand retail hardware men raised their hands and promised to write the letters. I referred to these facts in my talks last year. We have found that of the hundreds who raised their hands, only thirty wrote. Some time after I made my last speech the last chapter of this story came. The man who has supplied this information ascertained that about eighty letters were written, and of those written to, eight had replied, and that those in turn had been written to, and only one had written a third letter. It is hardly incumbent upon me to produce any further proof that the retail dealer is asleep at the switch.

There is not a retail dealer but who could make a dent in the business of the catalogue houses if he would. I had a conversation with the manager of one of the catalogue houses which was a very interesting one to me at least. Among other things I told him was if I could have five hundred live retail merchants within a radius of five hundred miles of him who would undertake it, that we could put them out of business in two years. I believe that statement is true.

Last year it was my privilege to address something like a thousand retail merchants, and almost every week brings me letters from merchants all over the United States, and out of all these merchants I have met four, and am in occasional touch with the fifth, who were intelligently and persistently fighting the mail-order houses. I could mention a half dozen who have gone into this fight, but for one reason or another have given it up. The success of the mail-order houses is due to the fact that the retail merchants are indifferent. Their attitude on this proposition is on a par with their attitude toward the trusts. They damn the trusts, and then they sit up all night making out orders for trust goods. I have had letters from merchants who would be only too glad to have mail-order houses out of their way if only some one would take them out of their way for them.

I am an ordinary retail merchant like the rest of you. I am talking to you because this is not the fight of one man or group of men, but it is the fight of every man who is engaged in the retail business. I am talking to you because I need your help in this, fight fully as much, if not more, than you need mine, and I know that together we can do something. I am talking to you because I know that your indifference is due to ignorance and hopelessness, and because I know you could meet and beat the mail-order houses, and that the bigger the opposition, the better the chance of success. Last year I laid down some rules for the retailer, and they are:—

First. Tell your troubles to the policeman.

Second. Get and study every one of the mail-order house catalogues.

Third. Buy goods of them.

Fourth. Advertise to meet the mail-order house prices.

A few moments ago I charged that there was not a merchant within the sound of my voice who could not make a dent in the business of the catalogue houses if he would. I want to emphasize one fact. I haven't done one single thing but what any of you could and should have done. It has simply been a case of taking hold of the thing nearest at hand and doing it. I haven't accomplished a great deal, but if every retail merchant in the United States will do as much in the next year as I have done, we will together chip off a few ciphers from the profits of the mail-order houses before Christmas.

Tell your troubles to the policeman. Go directly to the man who makes it possible for these mail-order houses to do business. Two years ago the hardware dealer was buying the Daisy Air Gun at $12.75 a dozen and selling it at $12 a dozen, if you were meeting Montgomery Ward's price. In May of that year I took up that matter with the manufacturers, and after seven months' correspondence I stated that they had decided not sell goods to the mail-order houses any more. Every one of you should have the latest issue of Montgomery Ward's catalogue, and you find that gun is listed at $1.25. That was owing to my efforts alone, I did nothing but what any of you could have done. I simply went to the manufacturer and demanded a favorable price as they were giving other retailers. They were willing to grant me that price and I hadn't expected that they would.

A little over a year ago I received a copy of the Moore & Evans catalogue. This catalogue quoted an Ingersoll dollar watch at 75 cents and the Ingersoll $1.50 watch at $1.05, which was your cost. A little later I received a letter from the American Fair Trade League in regard to maintained prices, fair competition, etc. I wrote and asked what we could expect in the way of a square deal from outsiders, and members of the executive committee of that league were selling at an unfair price. Later I received another Moore & Evans catalogue quoting those prices, which I forwarded to Mr. Ingersoll, and invited his investigation. I heard nothing from him, but later I received another copy of that catalogue, and there were no Ingersoll watches quoted at that price. I simply turned in the fire alarm.

I had the same experience with the Gillette razor, and you don't find that quoted in the Moore & Evans catalogue now. I referred to these facts last year, and so how the matter came to the attention of William Ingersoll, and he wrote and thanked me for calling his attention to it, and said he hadn't known until he received my complaint that their products were being offered this way.

I also called the attention of the North Brothers people to the Gillette competition, and they stated that in view of the fact that they had received no complaints, they had no reason to suppose that the sale of their products was unfair in the retail trade. They stated

Sweet Milk in
has been added to
AUNT JEMIMA'S
PANCAKE FLOUR

We have added Powdered Sweet Milk to the formula, so that now to make the best cakes in the world, the housewife just adds cold water to Aunt Jemima's Pancake Flour.

Remember, the Powdered Milk in Aunt Jemima's Pancake Flour is a big feature, full of meaning to the women.

Aunt Jemima's with the Powdered Milk will sell like "hot cakes."

See that your stock is right.

Do you know about the lower price for Aunt Jemima this year?
If not, ask your jobber.

Don't forget
Aunt Jemima's
Buckwheat Flour.

It also contains Powdered milk
now.

If you would like to have the funny Aunt Jemima Rag dolls for your children, write me on one of your letter heads, and it will give me pleasure to send a set of four with the compliments of our company.

they had received no complaints in regard to the Larkin competition.

It has been my privilege to conduct a long correspondence with Mr. Noyes, formerly president of the American Hardware Association. I asked of him only what I asked of the others, that I and other retailers be placed on the same basis as the catalogue houses that retailed. He replied that their policy was one of compromise and of protecting the retail dealers in their manner of selling catalogue houses.

Some time ago you were buying No. 1 Victor traps at 11 cents and selling them at $1.30 a dozen. The catalogue houses were buying them at 80 cents a dozen and selling them at $1.30 a dozen. You were losing 4 per cent. by handling these traps. The catalogue house was making approximately 30 per cent. on sales. I outlined these facts to Mr. Noyes. I told Mr. Noyes that the average consumer would save 14 per cent. by buying his traps of the mail-order houses, and I told him that I was not asking for protection, that I could take care of myself; that all I wanted was equal opportunity. If they will give us that the mail-order business will soon come to an end.

Why a Manufacturer Should Be Permitted to Fix the Retail Price of His Product.

Views of Various Believers in This Doctrine Who Offer Them as Arguments for the Pending Stevens Bill.

[The "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" has obtained and will from time to time present a series of statements by various well-known persons who believe that the manufacturer should have the right to tell the retailer what price he must get for the manufacturer's product. All of the views which will be presented can be taken as arguments for the pending Stevens Bill, which seeks to give a manufacturer that right.—Ed.]

No. 1—By Louis D. Brandeis, Attorney.

Take a case of a baker of bread, the baker of "Tip Top" bread, who says: "I undertake not only to bake bread properly but to pack it properly; to pack it in oiled paper; to sell in loaves not only a known weight and quality, but in a known condition; in a package which is both sanitary and attractive; and I establish my price at 10 cents, and that price shall be uniform to all. I determine to make the price and the quality of the bread stable regardless of the fluctuations in the price of wheat. Whether wheat goes down to 80 cents or goes up to $1.10. I propose to sell my bread at 10 cents a loaf. I sell it from my bakery, and my business grows.

Nobody questions my right to fix 10 cents as the price and to say that I will always stick by 10 cents no matter what the change in the market is, whether wheat goes up or down; no matter whether labor goes up or down. My business prospers because people want my bread and like the way I present it to the public. The guarantee of my name on it is worth something to them. Although dealers offer other bread for 8 cents a loaf, they buy mine. My business grows and there are people in other parts of the city who want my bread. After undertaking to deliver it for a while in other parts of the city with my own wagon, I conclude that it will be better to establish branches. I establish five such branches and I adhere to the 10-cent price. No human being questions my right to fix 10 cents as the price at those five branches, just as it is my right to fix that price for goods sold at my bakery. It takes considerable capital to establish those branches, but I have saved money enough for that purpose.

Then there comes a wider demand for my bread from neighboring cities. I am not able to establish more branches, so I undertake to secure so-called agencies—dealers who will sell my bread on commission. I establish five such agencies, and still I adhere to 10 cents as the price at which my bread must be sold. Everybody admits my right to do this under the law.

That is, my rights are the same in respect to fixing 10 cents as the selling price whether I sell from my bakery, from a branch, or from an agency.

But if I lack the capital or organizing ability to establish branches or agencies, or prefer to retail my bread generally through dealers, the right then to insist upon the standard selling price is questioned. If I should say, "No, I will sell not only to a restricted number of people but to anybody in this whole part of the country who chooses to deal in my bread and I will let anybody sell my bread who wants to do so. But anybody who wishes to sell it, who will pay me my price of 7½ cents a loaf, and will agree to retail it at 10 cents a loaf can have my bread on equal terms." Then the law comes in and says, according to the majority decision of the Supreme Court, it can not be done. And the court in saying it can not be done does not apply any underlying principle of law, but expresses merely its opinion that such agreements are against public policy and that it believes Congress intended to prohibit them when it enacted the Sherman law. I submit most respectfully that this is a most erroneous supposition, that there is nothing against the public interest in allowing me to make such an agreement with retail dealers, since if I had money enough I could accomplish the same result by establishing any number of agencies over the country. The denial of the right to establish standard prices results in granting a privilege to the big concerns; a discrimination in favor of the rich and powerful against the small man; for the concern with large capital, as the powerful trusts, can secure adherence to the standard price while the small manufacturer or producer cannot. The small man needs the protection of the law; but the law is destroyed. The rule laid down by the Supreme Court is inconsistent with the business policy adopted in this country and recently confirmed by the Clayton Act and in the Federal Trade Act—the policy of regulating competition. The decision must be explained by the fact that the court did not fully understand the practical application of the rules to the trade facts. The public interest clearly demands that price standardization be permitted; and demands it in the first place in the interest of the small man.

Important Chain Store Change. Joint Committees to Push Along Use of Metric System in Commercial Transactions. Austin, Nichols & Co. Absorb More Jobbing Houses. Canned Tomatoes Attract Attention. Market Summary.

Special Correspondence of "Modern Merchant and Grocery World."

New York, Sept. 24, 1915.

An interesting announcement for the week was that the Riker & Hegemann drug stores, which constitute a long chain scattered over the country, had been bought from the United Cigar Stores Co., which has owned them for some months, by the United Drug Co., of this city. There are about ninety-five of the stores, and they do a business of over $35,000,000. From now on they will be operated as part of the Liggett chain system.

Mr. Fred. R. Drake, of Easton, Pa., who is chairman of the Metric Committee of the National Wholesale Grocers' Association, had a conference in this city recently which may have some effect in bringing the adoption of the metric system of weights and measures a little nearer. The conference was with Dr. Harry V. Army, Professor of Chemistry of the Columbia University and chairman of the Metric Committee of the American Pharmaceutical Association, and Henry G. Bayer, secretary of the Chemical Ceramic Company of this city. At the conference it was arranged that the American Chemical Society and the American Pharmaceutical Association would appoint committees to confer with a committee from the National Wholesale Grocers' Association to develop plans for hastening the day when the metric system would be used in all commercial transactions. The American Association of Day was announced during the week by Austin, Nichols & Co. that they had absorbed three additional jobbing houses, being those of Johnson-Murray in Utica, Cortland and Ogdensburg, N. Y. It will be remembered that in this correspondence recently was revealed the intention of Austin, Nichols & Co. to own and conduct as soon as possible a chain of fifty-five wholesale grocery stores. The three new establishments will be conducted by the people that formerly owned them.

The trade here are paying considerable attention at present to the tomato situation. The frequent rains during the summer, culminating in a spell of extremely hot weather, which ended with unseasonably cold weather, have dealt the growing crop a very decided blow. As a result it is now said that the pack will not be over 50 to 60 percent of last year. As has been noted in your market columns, the price has advanced about $33\frac{1}{3}$ per cent since a few weeks ago, when tomatoes were selling at 65 cents No. 3s. As a matter of fact this is exactly the price at which tomatoes are now quoted. Estimates of the pack vary here from $7\frac{1}{2}$ million cases to 9 million. Nobody is predicting more than 9 million, although the pack for 1913 was 11 million and for 1914 15 million. It is noticed that the packers in the East to piece out their packs have been paying as much as 35 cents a ton for tomatoes delivered to their factories. This is equivalent to about \$21 per ton or nearly three times the contract price of \$8 per ton. It makes the cost of packing tomatoes \$1.025. The jobbers everywhere are pretty hard hit by the advance, as fewer futures were purchased this year than for a long

SUMMARIZED MARKET CONDITIONS.

Price unchanged and inclined to be a little heavy upon news from India and Ceylon. Demand for a considerable quantity of these grades of tea. Other grades are steady; demand fair.

Coffee still quiet. Prices unchanged for the week.—Sugar very much demoralized. Raws have dropped a fraction and refiners have been selling granulated during the week as low as 4.80, although as the week closes this price has been withdrawn and most refiners are now on a basis of 5 cents. Domestic beet is quoted at 4.80 to 4.95.—Dried fruits about unchanged. The only thing in any way firm is Malaga raisins, which have advanced 20 cents a box over opening quotations. All dried fruits are still quiet. Future prunes somewhat easier.—Tomatoes very strong and high on probable short pack. Demand improved. Other canned goods unchanged with corn firm.—Wheat nervous with frequent fluctuations, both up and down.—Flour in good demand at about unchanged prices for the week.

AMONG THE TRADE.

All of the tenants in 19 South Front street, feeling the impulse of prosperity, have removed to much larger and better quarters at 45 South Front street, formerly occupied by the West Electric Hair Curler Co. The tenants are J. E. Elliott & Co., Williams & Root and T. H. Bourne & Co., all manufacturers' representatives and all good fellows, well deserving the prosperity that has so evidently come to them.

Dry Goods Business Better Than a Year Ago.

Marshall Field & Co., in their weekly review of the dry goods trade, say:—

Current wholesale shipments of dry goods show some increase over the corresponding week a year ago, and sales by our traveling organization are about even with those of the same period.

Fewer merchants have visited the market, and collections are slightly below normal.

The staple domestic cotton goods market is firm.

The warm weather is giving retailers an opportunity to clean up their stocks of summer goods, but it is delaying the distribution of fall merchandise.

WITH THE EDITOR

The following from the Philadelphia "Public Ledger" of last Thursday will interest any general merchant who handles a patent medicine called "Nulfey" tablets:—

Another Fake.

After such experts as Dr. J. Solis-Cohen, Dr. John DaCosta, Jr., of Jefferson Hospital, and Dr. M. Howard Fussell, of the University of Pennsylvania, had testified that Matusow's Nulfey tablets were practically worthless as a cure for the thousand and one diseases described on the labels on the bottles, a jury in the United States District Court yesterday convicted Harry Matusow, the manufacturer, of misbranding the article. Judge Thompson deferred sentence pending the disposition of a motion for a new trial.

Matusow stated in his literature that Nulfey tablets would cure paralysis, locomotor ataxia, Bright's disease, rheumatism, gout, diabetes and other ailments too numerous to mention. An analysis of the tablets by a Government chemist disclosed, it was testified, that they were composed of more than 50 per cent. sodium salicylate, and the balance aloes and talc. All of the physicians called by the Government agreed that none of the ingredients was a curative agency. One statement in the circular declared that a person taking Nulfey tablets "could eat what they liked." Dr. Cohen said this was bad advice, as certain food in certain disease would cause death.

Note that sentence was deferred. When pronounced, I predict it will be a small fine. If I were the judge and could do it under the law, I would sentence this faker to eat nothing but his Nulfey tablets for the rest of his life.

A Fool Canard.

Here is something from the esteemed "Modern Grocer":—

The sentiment on a motto card which came to "The Modern Grocer" is not new. It is worth reproducing, however, because it is worth remembering. Here it is:—

"If your competitor talks about you, put him on your payroll. Never mind what he says, so long as he talks."

I can no longer see this fool thing printed and keep my mouth shut. It is one of those things that drift about the literary sea, appearing first in one paper and then in another. It sounds sharp and clever, but it is absolutely unsound and untrue. Criticism and scandal never helped a victim yet unless they went beyond a certain point and so made him an object of sympathy. Up to that point they always do harm. There is a yellow streak in human nature which makes all of us too ready to believe the evil that we hear of others. If I am told by one grocer that his competitor up the street persistently gives short weight, I may not implicitly believe it, but it certainly will not lead me to go to the alleged short weight store. And if I were the grocer who was accused, it is hardly likely, either, that I would look on it as a good advertisement. If I knew a grocer who was being so accused, and he did not at once sue his accuser for damages, I should instantly put him down as guilty.

Give me silence rather than slander every time.

Not long ago a retail grocer doing business not far from Philadelphia began to go behind. He had never been so very far ahead, but he had seemed to hold his own—he had a very good stand—but when some new competition appeared, he soon lost face and later fell afoul of his jobber's credit man, who began to press him for overdue money.

The retailer went in to see the jobber and as the man he really wanted to see was absent on his vacation, he was turned over to a young fellow who had recently come with the firm, but who had had a valuable course of business training at the Wharton School of the University of Pennsylvania.

This young man resolved to get at the bottom of the retailer's plight, if he could, and with that in view he put him through an examination which ran about as follows:—

Do you advertise?

No; advertising don't pay me.

Do you ever have special sales?

No; I'm no cutter.

Do you pay any attention to advertised goods?

No; I won't let any manufacturer force me to handle his goods.

Do you take a trade paper?

Yes; I take two.

Do you read them?

Oh, once in a while when I have time.

Ever make any attempt to yoke up with special occasions, like Raisin Day and Canned Goods Week and Coffee Week, so as to get the benefit of it in new business?

No; let those fellows do their own advertising, I say.

Have you got a local association?

We have a county association.

Do you belong to it?

Yes.

Do you attend the meetings?

Oh, once in a while. Never anything going on—nothing to go for.

Do you ever have anything going on at your store to attract attention to it—make it lively?

I had a demonstration of G. Washington's Coffee there a year ago. Didn't pay.

How's your general health?

Oh, fair; suffer some from constipation.

Could there be a clearer picture of inefficiency? A poor, hopelessly lax, constipated failure, interest neither in his business, or in anything else. Very likely a good hearty laugh would kill him.

My first suggestion, if I were prescribing for this gentleman would be to remove the constipation. Constipation has closed many stores and sent many a note to the sheriff. After that—though that alone might cure the case—it would depend on the man's native ability whether he could pull out. He will never pull out in this world as he is now.

Much is being said and written about the effort of the eight Philadelphia jobbers to buy cooperatively and thus get an extra count from the manufacturer.

far the plan has not been very successful. Usually the jobbers' combination has asked manufacturer for an extra 5 per cent., in return not only for the combined order but for the extra specialty work which the one hundred and fifty salesmen employed by the eight jobbers were supposed to do.

Now the reason the manufacturers have not granted the extra count is perfectly evident. They were already selling their goods as cheap as they could afford to, or at least as they cared to do, they preferred to have their work done by their own salesmen, even at greater cost, rather than by jobbers' salesmen whose time was largely taken up with other things. I predict that no matter how the jobbers' combination pushes, a considerable number of important manufacturers will grant its position for an extra discount,

The Pennsylvania Convention Report.

The "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" regrets now having to abandon its invariable habit of publishing a stenographic report of the Pennsylvania State convention, which occurred in Connaught Park three weeks ago. The completed report is not yet available, and this paper will not publish, if it can help it, news so stale as that would be when it finally reached our readers.

We repeat what we said last week in this connection: this is a plain case of pitiful inefficiency on somebody's part, apparently, to judge from the following letter, on the part of the stenographer (?) who attempted to do it:—

Erie, Pa., September 22, 1915.

E. J. Buckley, 927 Arch Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

Dear Sir:—Your editorial on page 10 of issue of September 20th, regarding belated convention report, is very timely, and we thank you for it. We have been much annoyed by the delay of our stenotype reporter, who is long on promises and short on accomplishment, and does not seem to realize that convention proceedings are news which newspapers want before they get to be ancient history. We sent you first pages of the proceedings yesterday. We have read the Erie Business College, which did the work, your editorial, and we have backed the editorial up with a blunt personal opinion. There will be no unnecessary delay on my part and there will probably be a new convention reporter at Bradford. Again we thank you.

Yours very truly,

A. M. HOWES,

Secretary Pennsylvania Retail Merchants' Association.

Take the liberty of suggesting the jobbers that their chance to make money is not in reducing their prices, for in most cases there is little chance there, but in reducing their freights. There is no chance either if they are already buying in carload lots, but there is a chance on everything not bought in carload lots, which means possibly 5 per cent. of all the items handled by the average jobber. In every case a very great saving is possible merely by clubbing the orders and buying by the carload. Take honey, which is never bought in carload lots. The carload freight, as against the less than carload, amounts to over 5 per cent. on the cost of the article. Take California raisins, although that is not a good illustration because most jobbers already buy by carloads. For example, standard peaches, in 2½-cent tins, cost, f. o. b. coast, about 15 cents per dozen. Brought East by carload lots, the freight is 3 cents per dozen and the goods are $1.42 delivered in Philadelphia. If they were brought East in less than carload lots they would cost $1.43 delivered. There is a long list of articles, almost never bought by the jobber in carload lots, on which the freight, as to whether carload or less than carload, varies greatly, with a possible saving at every point. Whether this saving is sufficient to neutralize the cost that the Girard Grocery Co., to compete with which all these plans are being worked, does not need a profit while the jobber of course does, is a question which the future must answer.

Shredded Wheat Co. Gets Grand Prize at Panama Exposition.

The Shredded Wheat Co. has been awarded The Grand Prize for the purity and excellence of its product, for its clean and hygienic factory, for its welfare work among employees and for the high commercial standing of the company; also a Gold Medal for the unique shredding and baking machinery, also a Gold Medal for completeness of the exhibit, which consists of a miniature operating Shredded Wheat plant. The company's exhibit consists of a two-story white enameled pavilion of ornate architectural design, which contains cooking, shredding and baking machinery in full operation, showing the complete process of manufacturing Shredded Wheat Biscuit and Triscuit, also tables for serving these products to visitors. An automatic lantern, displaying beautifully colored pictures of the Niagara Region and interior views of the Shredded Wheat factory is a feature of the exhibit.

The Week's One-Time Ads.

Who wants a Kraut Cutter? A lot of you fellows ought to, because kraut time's come. Cabbage is going to be cheap and you can make a lot more money chopping up kraut and selling it than you can by selling Cream of Wheat and the other stuff you sell for nothing and board yourself. Take it from me, that the boys that are making the money to-day are the boys that are making their own money whenever they can. The boys are getting away from the stuff that everybody sells and most everybody cuts. You can get a little Kraut Cutter from John Smith's Sons Co., Buffalo, N. Y., for a very little money, and they will show you how to make kraut too. Ask the idea over—it has money in it. There's an ad. in this paper.

Turn over and see the kind of advertising the Butter-Kist Pop Corn people are doing to your customers. Right now, while you fellows are nodding in your chairs, there are people in your town that want Butter-Kist Pop corn, and will buy of you—at a bully profit—if you'll let them. All you need to do is to put in a Butter-Kist Popper. It's a little thing that makes Butter-Kist Pop Corn almost while you sleep. Stands anywhere and takes up no room to speak of. Classy looking and a big ad. More than that, it'll begin to earn money for you the minute you start it to work. You clear 70 cents out of every $1 you sell—do you get that, you people that sell soap three for 10 and sugar at cost? One man took in over $2,000 in five months! If you can't clear $15 or $20 a week out of this machine, without any extra work to speak of, then I don't want a cent. Read the ad. in this paper. JIMMY MANDER.

of the increased demand for raisin bread and package raisins which has been created by our nation-wide advertising campaign on California Raisin Bread, made with Sun-Maid Raisins?

If you are, there is more to come.

If you are not, do not delay another day to reap the benefits of it.

What we have done for the raisin bread and general raisin business is only the first part of what we are going to do. We have planned other full pages in the Saturday Evening Post and the Ladies' Home Journal.

We are making millions of mouths water for Sun-Maid Raisins, and the goodies that are made of them. We are giving raisins a new importance in the minds of the American people. They are ceasing to be merely an incidental detail of your business.

You are bound to be helped by this campaign boosting raisins, whether you handle the Sun-Maid kind or not; but you cannot expect to get the full results possible for yourself unless you identify yourself at once with us and our product—the first raisin to be nationally advertised.

The Grocery Markets

Coffee.

Coffee shows no change for the week. Prices are about where they were last week, speaking now of Rio and Santos, but the undertone is still somewhat easy on account of the fact that nearly three quarter of a million bags of coffee are on their way to this country, which is about twice as much as was afloat bound for here a year ago. What the owners of this do with it after it reaches here will determine the future of the market. Mild coffees are unchanged and quiet. Java and Mocha steady on the ruling basis.

Tea.

The tea market shows no change for the week although there have been some developments in tea. A substantial portion of the new Congou teas shipped to this country have been rejected on account of not being up to standard. These teas will therefore be subtracted from the supply available for this country and will have to be shipped to England, where they will probably be sold at a loss. Another development is the fact that England has added about 50 per cent. to its duty on tea, which will make teas of course very much higher in that country than they were before. If it has the usual tendency of reducing the consumption, it will make more tea available for other countries and may to some extent ease off the market. No change has occurred in any grade of tea during the week and the consumptive demand is fair.

Sugar.

The sugar market continues to be somewhat demoralized. Raws have declined somewhat during the week and the ruling quotation is now around 4.10. Refined sugar has also shown some sharp declines, and granulated has been sold as low as 4.80; though most refiners are asking 5 cents. Domestic beet granulated is now offered at 4.80 to 4.95. The consumptive demand for sugar has been very good up to the early part of the week.

Syrup and Molasses.

Glucose is unchanged for the week. Compound syrup has not yet awakened to an active demand, although it will do so very shortly if the weather keeps cool. Sugar syrup and molasses are unchanged and firm.

Fish.

Norway mackerel on spot show another advance for the week of about a dollar a barrel. Scarcity and the very high price of the new Norways are the reasons. A few new Norways have been sold during the week at the very high prices named a week ago. Cod, hake and haddock are unchanged and holders are looking forward to an opening demand very shortly. Salmon shows no particular change. The buying of future salmon, or rather, the confirming of orders given for future salmon, has been comparatively small, first because the price is high as compared with spot salmon, and second because some of the jobbers are carrying over stocks from last year. Domestic sardines are unchanged and quiet, and so are foreign sardines.

Dried Fruits.

There is nothing of interest in the dried fruit line. Prunes are quiet at unchanged prices and are peaches, apricots and raisins. No prices on new seeded raisins have as yet been made.

Canned Goods.

Tomatoes show an advance for the week of about 5 cents, both No. 3s and No. 2s. Quotations a large way f. o. b. the factory at 65 cents for 2s and 85 cents for 3s with some holders staying in the market for even higher prices. The outlook is poor, and it is unlikely that the pack will exceed per cent. of last year, or about 7,000,000 cases. If this is the case and if the consumption proves to be as estimated, about 9,500,000, a very firm situation will undoubtedly develop, and prices will be considerably higher. In fact, predictions are freely made that the market will be a dollar before Christmas. Corn and peas show no change for the week. The outlook is inclined to be firm on account of the effect of the heat on the growing crop. Apples are and unchanged. California canned goods, both spot and future, are dull and quiet. Futures are dull and quiet. There is no business from first hands as futures are about being delivered. Small Eastern staple canned goods unchanged and dull.

Beans and Peas.

Pea beans are unchanged on last week's basis; demand fair. Marrows have gone up an inch further and holders are now asking $5 per bushel to come forward. The demand is very light. Scarcity is the cause. California limas have moved up a shade during the week, although we repeat that there is no good reason why they should; demand fair. Green and Scotch peas are unchanged and quiet. New goods are available on the basis of $2.30 to $2.35 in a large way.

Butter.

The butter market is active on the previously reported basis of price. Fancy butter is cleaning up on arrival and the consumptive demand continues very good. Receipts are about what one would expect at this season, but will likely fall off in the near future. This will probably cause a slight advance.

Eggs.

The egg market is unchanged for the week with a very good consumptive demand, which is absorbing the receipts on arrival. The quality of the current receipts, considering the weather, is good. The market is healthy without any important change in sight.

Cheese.

The cheese market is steady and unchanged. There is a normal production and a seasonable consumptive demand. The quality of the cheese now arriving is the best of the year and considerable of it is being sold for storage. There is no export demand to speak of.

Provisions.

All smoked meats are in fair demand with a slight advance on all cuts during the week, ranging from $\frac{1}{4}$ to $\frac{1}{2}$ cent. Pure lard is steady and unchanged, while compound is steady at an advance of $\frac{1}{4}$ cent. Barreled pork, canned meats and dried beef are unchanged and in moderate demand.

INDIVIDUAL MARKET REPORTS.

Imported Fish Specialties.

The import situation seems to be growing more serious daily. What we have foreshadowed in our weekly market reports now for some time seems to have been realized insofar as prices for imported food products are going higher daily. Sardines, for instance, are being sold here to-day way below import price. In France, they have practically no catch. In Portugal they have been catching a few small fish suitable for the American trade, but owing to the increased prices which the packers have to pay for tinplate, solder, labor and for all raw materials, they feel obliged to ask such high prices for what little they can pack, that we are unable to acquire the goods at their asking prices, because we cannot realize a profit on the goods here, for the simple reason that importers who still hold old stocks paid for at old prices do not take into consideration the advance; so the market in Europe is high, but America does not buy. Europe, particularly Germany, are buying what they can get hold of, and until this abnormal situation changes, we shall have to play a waiting game.

In Norway they have had hardly any catch of late, but the season is rather young yet, and it is our opinion that there will be some fishing and that we shall be able to get plenty of supplies a little later on. In the meanwhile, we simply have to sell what we have, and if necessary, buy slowly at the present abnormally high prices until the situation changes. We do not believe that any of the American importers of any consequence are paying the present prices, as they could not import the goods and realize a profit on them.

Wheat and Flour.

Two weeks ago the September option in Chicago closed at 94 cents and in Minneapolis at 89 cents, producing the following situation: The spring wheat millers have sold large quantities of flour for September shipment and unless the crop moves freely from the farms the millers are likely to find themselves in the same situation that the soft wheat millers were in when they sold flour for July shipment and could not obtain the wheat by reason of the wet harvest. This milling demand may cause the premiums for cash wheat to be maintained early in the month of September, and should the movement from the farms be disappointingly small we might witness a considerable advance in the September options.

Since this the September option in all markets has steadily advanced and the more distant futures have lagged behind at half-speed. In all probability we shall witness erratic markets during the balance of this month, but with the passing of the September deal the market is likely to come to a pause. From a statistical standpoint the situation is extremely bearish, for an official estimate of the Canadian crop was issued this week, giving the total crop as 308,000,000, which, together with the 981,000,000 harvested in the United States, makes a total crop for North America of 1,289,000,000 bushels, as against 1,052,000,000 last year.

Here is a surplus of 237,000,000 (23 per cent.) more than last year's huge total to be marketed. The question naturally arises how can this surplus be marketed without forcing prices to a lower level. Our opinion is that with the present world's condition, farmers in Canada and in the United States will not market their crop very freely and that there is a disposition on their part to hold their wheat is evidenced by the very small arrivals of wheat at primary points.

With the war continuing the carry-over in all positions of 20 to 25 per cent. is not an excessive estimate. It is quite probable that the carry-over at the end of this crop will be 200,000,000 bushels in farmers' hands and in the visible supply, as against 37,000,000 carried over in these two positions from last year's crop.

We must always keep in mind that the present price of wheat is discounting a smaller export demand and that Argentina and India are being counted upon to raise a full average crop. The Argentine crop is barely in the ground and will be harvested in December. The India crop is harvested in April, so that an estimate of either crop is purely guesswork, and much may happen to completely alter the complexion of affairs.

Our own opinion is that in the next six weeks the low point should be reached, as then we will have had the weight of a simultaneous movement of our winter and spring wheat crops, together with the Canadian crop.

Standard Canned Goods.

Another week of sizzling hot weather parched the ground, burned up the vines and scalded the fruit worse than before, throughout the tomato belt in this section. We are now in the last half of September, the critical period for the crop, and the outlook is more discouraging than it was at any time this season. Raw tomatoes sold up to 90 cents a bushel last week, against an average price of, say, 30 cents a bushel in ordinary times, and the yield of filled cans per bushel was one-third less than usual. The lack of blossoms on the vines indicates that the early closing of the canning season is in sight, and that the relief from this hot weather was too late to be of any material advantage to the crop. Never before was there a season when the jobbers bought so very few tomatoes for future delivery, and having little or no confidence in the advance in price, they hesitated too long, and are now obliged to buy them at whatever the price may be.

At the close of business the indications were strongly in favor of an active demand in the coming week, taking the increased buying of tomatoes in all markets this side of the Rockies as a criterion. The average size of the orders was much larger than heretofore, denoting returning confidence on the part of the jobbers. Efforts to buy tomatoes in large blocks at full prices were not successful, for the reason that there are no individual sellers of large quantities because they are not in position to do business in them on a very large scale this season. To illustrate, there are several canners in Baltimore who would in ordinary seasons, accept from us orders for 50,000 cases, but they would not sell over 5,000 cases in one lot at to-day's prices. The developments in the tomato market during the next two weeks will be mighty interesting to everyone who handles that article, canners, jobbers and brokers alike.

The buying of pie peaches and seconds table peaches was better than it was during the previous week. These two grades were widely scattered to nearly all the markets which look to Baltimore for their supplies. There was some little buying of the fancy extra yellow No. 3 peaches, in heavy syrup, but there was no snap to the business. There is a better demand for apples and pears, and some of the small fruits, berries, cherries, etc., are being inquired for. The canners fully expect the fall trade in fruits will be as large as usual in this section.

Rice.

The week has been one of considerable activity in all styles. Receipts of new crop continue to enlarge and the assortment is steadily widening out. The market, however, is stronger in tone and prices, especially for prime and fancy qualities, have hardened full $\frac{1}{4}$ cent, due in part to the fact that some of the "shorts" have been forced to "run to cover" because accepting orders on a low plane in anticipation of extra liberal receipts. Receipts of rough have fallen behind season on account of rains all through the rice belt and also because many of the planters are storing their rice rather than accept former values, prices are pushed up 25 to 40 cents a barrel. With these conditions in the immediate outlook would tend to indicate a maintenance of the present advance for the cleaned product, course principally for the better grades.

Advices from the South along the Atlantic coast report that trade continues satisfactory and with the recent advance on cotton, if the market on commodity continues its upward trend this section looks forward to a satisfactory business during the next three months. Carolina, contrary to expectations, has not yet appeared on the market.

At New Orleans the general disjunctive demand continues strong, showing a disposition on the part of buyers to carry fair stocks at prevailing prices. The rough market continues steady with a stiffening tendency.

Spices.

The market is decidedly more active. This applies to all articles in the line, though the principal trading has been in black peppers. Foreign markets are higher. The exports from our country to South and Central America are steady.

Black Peppers.—Are firmer and in demand and in very steady demand. Small here are small. White peppers are in little demand, at generally unchanged prices.

Red Peppers.—Are in wide demand steady to firm prices. The supply has been sharply reduced.

Cloves.—Are unchanged. The demand is fair, which, however, shows increase from now on.

Pimento (Allspice).—Slightly firmer and in fair demand at present prices, which we consider safe.

Mace.—In very good demand steady prices for all grades.

Nutmegs.—In very active demand with considerably reduced supplies all sizes.

Cassias.—Are in better demand. Prices are steady, but unchanged. Some grades are likely to advance here long.

Green Ginger Root.—Selling in a very satisfactory way. The supply is now about equal to the demand.

Paprikas.—Trading is about normal. Prices, as a rule, are unchanged.

Looks Like Cranberry Shortage.

Returns from a special inquiry of cranberry growers in the three principal producing States, sent out by the Department of Agriculture August 1st reports, give a probable production for Massachusetts of about 261,000 barrels, being 55 per cent. of last year's bumper crop of 475,000 barrels; New Jersey, 139,000 barrels, a decrease of 7 per cent. from last year's crop of 149,000 barrels; and for Wisconsin, 39,000 barrels, an increase of 3 per cent. over last year's crop of approximately 29,000 barrels, a probable total for the three States of approximately 439,000 barrels, against 653,000 barrels last year.

Another Statement From the American Grocers' Society.

Newark, N. J., Sept. 22, 1915.
To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—We are sorry to trouble you again, but we want to answer every doubt in your mind about the soundness and the future of the American Grocers' Society, of Newark, N. J.

1. There is not a single item in the American Grocers' Society's price-list sold below cost. Yet each staple item is sold at a price that enables the member to fight chain-store competition.

2. Every item listed in our price-list of 1,000 staple items shows a margin of profit between the manufacturer's selling price and the member's price. For example, one of the leading nationally advertised cereals shows a difference of 19 cents a case between the cost price and the member's price. Many bulk goods of course allow a still greater percentage of profit.

3. For dividends and large earnings the society looks to its own brand of American Grocers' Society label goods—owned by the grocer members.

We admit that our margin of profit is small on many package items. This is necessary if the society is going to help its members fight chain-store prices on these items, or to make more money for themselves. The criticism aimed at us is that the American Grocers' Society treasury cannot continue to live on such a narrow margin—presumably because no jobber could live on such a margin.

It is true no jobber could do it, but look at the difference in overhead expense between a co-operative society and an old line jobbing house.

1. The society does practically a cash business, as each member can not order merchandise in excess of the face of his stock, without putting up additional cash.

2. The society has no losses through bad debts—the jobber's heaviest burden.

3. The society has no credit department with attendant salaries of credit men.

4. The society has no traveling salesmen. It costs the jobber from

How to Sell More Rice

Put a sample of Imperator uncoated rice in your window beside a sample of the ordinary rice loaded with talc and glucose, use a placard telling the difference, and see yourself sell rice.

5 to 10 per cent. to drum the trade. The society saves its members at least 8 to 10 per cent. on cost of package goods. The elimination of this selling expense alone, Mr. Editor, is sufficient to explain all the mystery there is in American Grocers' Society's low prices. We have never claimed to save our members more than this.

One other thing. Members are allowed to check out merchandise against their stock. Now if the society were eating itself up, and consuming the members' original capital in operating expenses, the society couldn't ship merchandise against the members' stock on time as it now does. Obviously if we didn't have the money in the bank or the merchandise on hand we couldn't fill our orders, which we have never failed to do. Isn't this automatic and convincing proof that the organization is solvent and conservatively managed?

We sincerely hope soon to have and always to deserve the full endorsement of the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World," especially as it seems to be the only trade paper that is widely and One Good Man in a Hundred.

Talking in a general way with the president of a successful concern, he made this statement: "Do you know there is only one good man in a hundred?"

He referred to his own line of business—which is our line. It was a startling statement and so impressed itself on the writer that while riding home the evening paper was left unread.

I thought it would be no harm to take this one man, stand him up, figuratively speaking, on a platform, all the 99 to form a semi-circle and point out to them this fellow's characteristics.

In the first place, you will notice that his general appearance suggests neatness, his hair is brushed, his shoes shine, his trousers are creased and his collar fits, but he is no dude.

We find after a few minutes' conversation with him that he loves his work.

And this love of work we personally consider his chief asset. He says, "I read everything I see that pertains to the food business and ask a number of questions every day. I ask these questions, not in an idle way, but to get real information, which I try to apply." He rather bashfully makes the statement that when asked to do a thing does it promptly and thoroughly—thoroughly that he would feel ashamed to think that the next fellow could prove on it. This might be called his chief asset No. 2.

Questioning this 100 per cent. man further, we find that he considers will power a very important principle to cultivate, it saves him from the "black bottle" and from going in for the silly stuff that surely detracts from the clerks' efficiency. Yet he's not what you'd call a goody good chap.

Sounding him still deeper we discover a large ambition—a desire to go up the ladder with such comfortable companions as Truth, Honesty, Sobriety and Mental Cleanliness.

You will appreciate how responsive he is, how clear his eye and straight his look.

He has cheated the devil out of his big weapon—FEAR.

Now, gentlemen of the 99, here is your model, and this model possesses a gift which you cannot acquire, no man which cannot become your habit—a principle which does not rightly belong to you. You can make yourself a 100 per cent. man or you can remain yourself the 5 per cent. man.

Conditions, chance, luck, have nothing to do with it. "Success is within."

Ways How Not to Keep Store.

D'ye know, I know so much about the way a store ought to be run, that sometimes I'll be dinged if I ain't afraid my head'll bust.

I am the great Prof. Know-it-all and I own up to it.

I ain't ever had a store, and chance is if I had one I'd eat it up in six weeks, but I can sure tell other fellows how to run their's.

And I'm right too—right more than half the time.

The other day I was in a store out in the outskirts of Philadelphia. They have a cashier who once in a while, when there's a push on, waits on trade.

A customer came in, looking like she was in a hurry. Just in the midst of a wash or something. All the clerks were busy and so was the boss. The cashier was in his box.

The woman looked around and couldn't see any chance of getting waited on and so as to save time she went up to the cashier and asked if he could tell her whether the store kept a certain kind of washing tablet.

"I don't know ma'am," he said; "we have a little washing tablet for 5 cents. I don't know whether it's that kind or not."

She gave another look around—everybody still busy—and went out. Just to be disagreeable I asked the boss when I got at him whether he kept that tablet, and he said he did.

I say the cashier ought to have known it. What do you say? Maybe for all we know, that lost a good customer. Maybe it didn't, but it might.

The next day I was in another store that was run by a family. There's the boss, his wife and a couple of boys. A great scheme, if it works right—whole family interested in the same thing. The old man can sit down in the sitting room after dinner and light up his pipe and talk business with the whole bunch. Must be great—I'd like it.

A customer came in here too, in a hurry like the other one.

"Got any Vulcan safety matches?" he asked the boss.

"Think we have," he said, and he went over to the bin where they kept 'em. He didn't find any.

"Here's the same thing," he said, handing out some of another kind.

"They're not the same kind—the boxes are bigger. I have to have a certain size box," said the customer.

"I thought we had some Vulcans," said the boss. "Hey, Charlie," calling to one of his boys in the back room, "ask your mother if we haven't got Vulcan matches."

"No, we haven't, that's what they sent the last time," said Charlie, meaning that the jobber had put one over, I reckon.

The customer went out. Where was the hole in that? I'll tell you where it was. I've already said the customer was in a hurry. All that pawing over the stock, and calling to mother, and getting Charlie out, took time that oughtn't to have been wasted. I say the boss ought to have been able to say, right off, "no, we haven't got any." Or if he had ordered 'em, he ought to have seen that he got 'em.

Here's another thing: it's all right to let mother know the stock but mother oughtn't to be the only one that knows it, unless you can put a chain around mother's leg and keep her right in the store all the time. This business of letting one person in a business get to know the whole thing in a certain line, while the others go to him for everything is a blamed poor scheme, if you ask me. It's like having only one key to a store. It's too risky.

The next day after this I was in another store and there the worst thing of all happened.

An auto party stopped in front. This was a small village without any garage in it and this store sold gasoline. It was a classy party all right—they had a big green Packard and the whole bunch of 'em smelt of money.

A fellow got out with a long silk coat on and came in.

"We're stuck for gas," he said, "can you let us have some?"

He was talking to one of the clerks—the son of the boss.

"Sure," he said. He went and got it and filled the tank of the car. The owner of the car stayed in the store, buying some little stuff for the women to eat.

"How much for the gas?" he said, when the clerk came back.

"Fifteen gallons at 20 cents—$3."

Hanging about the store was one of these old-time store loafers, butting into everything with his gab, and he stood by and heard the talk about the gas.

"Jeerusalem," he said, talking to everybody in the store, "the oil trust's put gasoline up again, hev they? Twenty cents now, eh, why only yestidday it was sixteen! Well I be blamed!"

The clerk looked like he could kill him, but he didn't say anything and the auto fellow paid and went out. D'ye see what had happened? The clerk simply sized up the fellow as a rich man that was stuck for gasoline and he put up the price. The auto man was wise to the whole thing—anybody could see that. I could tell it right away by the way he looked when he heard what the old loafer said. Of course he was wise—you can't fool these fellows that drive cars all around the country.

Now it may just be that the people in that car was a family that had just moved in that village, or near it. I don't say they are, but I do say they might be. Can you see any of their money going into that store, if that's so? Why for the rest of his life that fellow will think of that store—and talk about it, too—as the place that robbed him of 80 cents.

I can see old Colonel Loafer getting beautifully kicked out of the store. Can't you?

THE STROLLER

Another Price Cutting Decision.

The United States District Court Chicago last week handed down opinion to the effect that manufacture of patented articles have the right to fix the price at which their products are to be sold at retail and insist that the stipulated price be adhered to by the retailer. The decision was rendered in the case of the American Graphophone Co. against the Boston Store of Chicago. The latter had entered into an agreement with the Columbia Graphophone Co., selling agent for the American Graphophone, agreeing to maintain the established prices on phonograph records, but instead of adhering to the contract, the department store advertised and sold records priced at 65 cents and 75 cents for 35 cents. Suit was then brought by the American Graphophone Co. principal to stop the price cutting. The court in substance, held that the manufacturer of a patented article has absolute right to govern the price which his product is to be sold to consumer when such product is sold to the retailer under a fixed price contract and that the Sherman law and the Clayton act did not apply.

[NOTE.—The italicized words near end of the above probably are the basis of the decision.—Ed.]

It's odd what little things make sales sometimes. A grocer told us the other day that the day before a woman had bought a jar of Croft's Swiss Milk Cocoa simply because she liked the novelty of the glass package. She didn't ask any questions about the peculiar characteristics of the cocoa; she liked the glass jar and bought.

There is a point in that for grocers who study the public—the useful novelty is usually the seller.

Croft's Swiss Milk Cocoa, the only cocoa packed in glass, has a smoother flavor than any other cocoa made. That is because our exclusive process of making takes out certain substances that other manufacturers leave in.

The following letter, from a Rochester, N. Y., reader, introduces a somewhat novel and very interesting question:—

Rochester, N. Y.

For the benefit of ourselves and other readers, what do you think of this? We have been very much upset and vexed for nearly a year by the conduct of one of our salesmen. He was intemperate and in recent months has seemed to grow worse. On account of his drinking habits he greatly disorganized our business in his territory and plunged us into snarl after snarl with several of our good customers. We kept him on as long as we did because he was a good salesman when sober, had a large family dependent upon him and was a distant relative of one of our firm.

However, he was implicated in a particularly disgraceful scene in Chicago during August and we could no longer refrain from discharging him. He left our employ September 1st. The condition in which he left business in his territory was so outrageous that we sent to all our customers a letter which was probably sharper than we would have sent had we not been so exasperated. In it we stated that "our business in your territory has greatly suffered by reason of the unfortunate personal habits of our former salesman, Mr. _____, whom we have now discharged."

The salesman claimed that this damaged his reputation very badly, and that the publicity which it carried prevented him from getting two positions. His attorney is threatening to bring suit against us for defamation of character, with a view, we feel, of compelling us to take him on again. We would appreciate your opinion as to whether he has any case.

Yours truly,
R. B. C. & Co.

The salesman has no case whatever if his former employers can prove what they said about him. If it is true that he has "unfortunate personal habits," and that those unfortunate personal habits did upset business in his territory, and if both these facts can be proven in court, the salesman's case will go up in smoke. It is fundamental that in a civil action to recover damages for libel, the person sued can always defend on the ground that what he said was the truth. Nobody can be unjustly damaged by the truth.

It is different where the action is a criminal one. If this salesman was threatening to arrest his employers for libel, instead of suing them for damages, they would be in position to worry more about it, because in many States the truth of the charges is not a defense in an action for criminal libel. True or not, it is still libel, and the defendant can go to jail for it, even though he spoke the absolute truth. In fact, everybody has heard the proverb, "the greater the truth, the greater the libel." The theory at the bottom of criminal libel is that the offense consists not in saying false things about one's neighbor, but in stirring up that neighbor to a breach of the peace. This has always been the law as to criminal libel, but the courts are coming more and more to take the view that if the thing said was true, and particularly, if there was a good reason for saying it, neither civil nor criminal action will lie.

Employers are often much too careless in what they say about their employees. A manufacturer well-known to me detected or thought he detected, one of his employees stealing from him. Without calling the man to him and seeing if he had any extenuating circumstances to present, he called him in before his office force and denounced him in the most violent way as a thief. The man denied it flatly and defied his employer to show that he had stolen anything. This the manufacturer was unable to do, in a way which amounted to legal proof. The employee at once sued for heavy damages and the manufacturer had to compromise for a substantial sum. It was wholly unnecessary. The employer should have waited until he knew he could prove what he said; then he would have been safe in saying it.

In another case the general manager of a jobbing concern left and started in business for himself. A bitter feud developed, in the course of which the ex-manager sent out a notice to the trade that his former employer had been guilty of short weight practices while he was with him. The jobber at once entered suit for damages and when the case was tried the former manager utterly failed with his proofs. He could not prove what he had charged, and a verdict for $3,500 was rendered against him. What he charged would not have been libel if he could have proven it.

Sometimes the statements of an employer about an employee, in proper circumstances, are protected for another reason—because they are privileged. A bookkeeper for B, but is discharged for incompetency and dishonesty. He applies to C for a position and gives B as a reference, hoping C won't ask B about it. C does ask B and is told that A was discharged for incompetency and dishonesty. This if untrue is gross libel. B would be in for all sorts of trouble. And even if true, B might be arrested for criminal libel, if it not that under such circumstances the statement was what the law calls privileged. In other words, B had a right to make it, and he neither be arrested nor compelled to pay damages.

The law holds the reputation of an employee, or anybody in business, tenderly, and regards a grievous offense any statement

Possible Cases Under New Pennsylvania Workmen's Compensation Act

Becomes Operative Next January 1st, and Makes all Retail Merchants Within the State Liable for Accidents to Their Employees While Latter are at Work.

[Inasmuch as the new Pennsylvania Workmen's Compensation Law which becomes operative next January 1st, affects every grocer and general storekeeper within the State, the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" will publish from time to time some possible cases which may arise under it, in the experience of the average grocer or general storekeeper. A full digest of the act was published in the issue of July 26th last. Readers heretofore will remember that it practically makes it compulsory for employers to pay damages to employees who meet with accidents in the course of their regular work.—Ed.]

Possible Case No. 1.

John Jones, retail grocer, employs a number of clerks, among them William Smith, who is married and has two children. Smith's salary is $15 a week. Smith goes to the cellar to move some boxes, and an oil barrel falls on him and breaks an arm and two ribs. He is confined to his house for six weeks, unable to work at all.

In this case, John Jones, the employer, would have to pay Smith nothing for the first fourteen days, because the act does not require the payment of indemnity during that period. Jones, however, would have to provide Smith with physician's services, medicine, etc., up to $25. For the remaining four weeks of the clerk's total disability

Jones would have to pay him half his wages, or $7.50 per week. In short, the accident could cost Jones $55, but no more if there is no permanent injury and the disability was confined to six weeks. Jones' liability would not be increased because Smith drew no benefits from beneficial or insurance concerns.

Before the law was passed, Jones could not have collected any money whatever from Jones unless he could have proven that Jones' negligence was the sole cause of the accident, and that he, Smith, was not careless in any way, in causing the barrel to fall. The new act almost no attention to these questions.

unduly reflects upon it. This should be added to one's fundamentals of business: never to say any disparaging word about anyone's honesty, or integrity, or ability, or competency, unless one has possession then, sufficient proof of its truth.

Question: F. G. Crandell, President The Ransom & Co., Toledo, Ohio.—I read the several articles written by you with great interest, particularly the recent one regarding the Stevens bill. It seems that you overlooked one important feature of the Stevens bill, viz., that the price of an article upon which a standard price has been established is not more than the same article would bring without the set standard. Therefore, should a man find that he has a quantity of goods on hand which he wished to dispose of, his chances would be much greater if the standard of value were fixed than they would be if there were no value fixed.

Furthermore, with fixed standard prices, he would have no difficulty in finding a majority of cases in finding a manufacturer or jobber willing to take the goods off his hands rather than have them thrown on the market at a cut price if there were no deterioration. If there were deterioration he would have the opportunity to cut the price and thus save himself.

As far as I have been able to learn from the provisions of the Stevens bill will prove a Godsend to manufacturers and dealers in standard goods.

Answer.—The above refers to an article written by me in which I said that one shortcoming of the Stevens bill is that it would prevent a dealer from cleaning up stock. Unless goods were physically damaged he could not reduce the price and clean them out, without the manufacturer's consent. I agree with all that Mr. Crandall says, but it does not seem to me to meet my purpose.

Perhaps some manufacturer would consent to a retailer cutting the price of their product because he only had a little of it and had to clean up, but probably the majority would not. I do not believe that in such a thing the retailer should be so completely at the manufacturer's mercy.

Editor.—Requests for information in this department should tersely set out all the facts bearing on the case, and all questions should be carefully worded to avoid misconception. Write on one side of the sheet only. Letters will be received at this office not later than Tuesday of each week, to ensure an answer in the Monday's issue.

European War Makes Us Clearing House for Big Coffee Crops.

Last Year We Brought in and Re-shipped to Europe Seven Times as Much Coffee as We Shipped the Year Before.

Washington, D. C.,

September 23, 1915.

As is well known, the United States is the largest single consumer of coffee, its imports at times approaching one-half of the total world production; but a new importance attached to its trade in the fiscal year ended June 30, 1915, as in that period the United States (and particularly the port of New York) became a clearing house for coffee cargoes owing to the war. In the fiscal year 1913 re-exports of coffee from the United States totaled 3,964,139 pounds, in 1914, 9,574,496 pounds, and in 1915, 66,574,501 pounds were reshipped to other countries. Of this quantity 61,491,903 pounds cleared through New York. Last year the United States imported 1,118,690,524 pounds of coffee, as against 1,001,528,317 pounds in 1914 and 863,130,757 pounds in 1913; but so heavy were the re-exports, as noted, that consumption—i. e., net imports—was barely 6 per cent. greater than in 1914, whereas consumption in 1914 was 15 per cent. in excess of that for 1913. Practically all of the advance in coffee shipments from the United States during the past year is accounted for by the enormously increased cargoes that went to Europe. Denmark and the Netherlands alone took 31,700,000 pounds more than in the preceding fiscal twelve months, and Norway, Sweden and Greece took 12,200,000 pounds, whereas there were no direct cargoes thither in either 1914 or 1913. It is interesting to note that, while the vast increase in coffee shipments in 1914-15 is directly attributable to the European conflict that was raging during eleven months of that year, there was no evidence of "war prices" in the values assigned to the outgoing cargoes. On the contrary, the aver-

Good Work for Aunt Jemima.

Aunt Jemima's pancake and buckwheat flour is being distributed, and the trade is well pleased, because the price on this high-class piece of goods has been adjusted so as to give the grocers more profit, and the Aunt Jemima Mills Co., manufacturers in St. Joseph, Mo., have not only introduced a new feature on their formula, adding pure milk in powdered form, so that the goods are not only improved, but are ready for instant use by simply adding cold water, but in addition Aunt Jemima will be more heavily advertised than ever before, and the consumer's demand will, accordingly, be greater, so look out, boys, for your stocks. Aunt Jemima will be a whirlwind this year.—Advt.

Messrs. L. Lehman & Co., Dover, N. J., send me a clipped newspaper advertisement which they used, and which is evidently part of a series. It measures six inches single column and is here reproduced in about original size:—

Lehman's Talker— Subjects Changed Daily

By W. E. S.
Good Afternoon!

Always a Bargain at the Bottom.

THE LEHMAN CREED.

We believe in give and take and that one man's money is as good as another's.

We believe in cash buying on both sides—yours and ours.

We believe that "quality is more important than price," and that 50c. sometimes spoils a five-dollar dinner.

We believe in stamps because you do.

We believe a food store is incomplete that hasn't the goods for 21 square meals a week, and a couple extra for special occasions.

We believe that natural dirt and good food are bad mixers.

We believe in the family spirit—that we're bound together for one another's help.

We believe we're ready this minute to take a good order, deliver it in fine shape and save you money on the transaction.

Tomorrow we will sell 3

L. LEHMAN & CO

This is a style of advertising, which while clever and attractive, is in my judgment, going out of fashion. The epigrams in this advertisement are unusually good and every one means something. They aren't mere bits of cleverness, reeled off for the purpose of getting a laugh. There is an advertisement in every one. But the average person, pressed on every side by a multitude of other advertisements, has not, in my judgment, the patience or the time to read them, or thinks he hasn't, which is just as bad for the advertiser. It is clever enough to put a bargain at the foot of these advertisements, but I would be willing to wager everything that if a canvass could be taken it would be found that at least eight out of every ten—probably 95 out of every 100—if they paid any attention to this advertisement at all, went straight to the bargain at the bottom and skipped all the rest. That was "reading," in which they weren't interested. Lehman & Co., who are pretty methodical people, may have ascertained by some method of their own, whether their epigrams were read. If they have, I should be greatly interested in knowing what they found. I should expect them to say that the advertisements pulled—that is, that they got orders for the bargains at the bottom, but that of course doesn't prove at all that any attention was paid to the rest of the advertisement.

NOTE.—This department is devoted to the criticism of advertising matter sent in, to the devising of new advertising ideas for special occasions, upon request, and to the suggesting of original advertisements when data is supplied. All communications sent for this Department should be addressed to the Editor of Science of Advertising. They will be taken up in strict rotation.

We Will Soon Have Many More California Lemons.

Twenty thousand acres in young lemon trees in California will soon come into bearing and double the domestic supply. The crop for the year ended August 31, 1915, was 6,667 cars, or 132 per cent. more than last year. These large increases in production will call for a serious study in marketing the lemon crop of the United States. The California Fruit Growers' Exchange lemon shippers have organized a company to manufacture by-products from the lower grades of fruit. The plant is under construction and the business will be handled on a co-operative basis, the growers receiving the full returns for the by-products after the cost of operation is deducted. From one and one-quarter to one and one-half million dollars' worth of lemon oil, citrate of lime and other lemon by-products are imported annually into the United States. These products can be manufactured successfully in California from the lower grades of fruit that are not worth shipping, as well as from fruit that demoralizes the markets because of its inferior quality.

Pennsylvania Organization Notes.

The Bellwood Association has instituted a "Buy at Home" campaign, which promises to be a big success.

The Lititz Business Men's Association has decided to affiliate with State Association.

Mr. Smedley assisted in the organization of the Wilkesburg Association September 16th. The meeting was attended, about 100 being present. J. Coll is secretary. At the meeting dresses were made by Mr. Smedley. Geo. McGarry, Johnstown, Pa.; W. Lansberry, Homestead, Pa., and others. The association will incorporate and give special attention to credits.

The Frankford Association held a meeting on September 20th at its room. Plans were made for the fall and winter campaign.

Weekly Window Display Suggestions

Fruit and Vegetables.

Here is one of the neatest and cleverest displays I've described yet. You do is to build a slant of boards over the entire window, making it high in the rear and cover the whole thing with white crepe paper. Arrange strips of evergreen in squares on the slant and also up and around the slant for a background. In each of these squares put some fruit or vegetable, but do not put much, or it will not look neat, and you also want the crepe paper to show all around each fruit or vegetable. The number of squares of course depends on the different kinds of truck you have. To hold them in place so that they won't roll down the slant, use a few thin wire nails in each square.

Have You Made Your Lipton's Tea Display Yet?

The time is ripe, people are home, tea is being bought. Not only can you sell some tea through a Lipton Tea display now, but you may win a big slice of the $175 prize money that is to be given away as prizes in our Display Contest on November 1st.

The contest is for the five best window displays of Lipton's Tea. The "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" will give to the five retail dealers who make the most attractive window displays of Lipton's Tea before the end of this contest, the following cash prizes:—

For the Best	-	-	-	-	$75
For the Second	-	-	-	-	$50
For the Third	-	-	-	-	$25
For the Fourth	-	-	-	-	$15
For the Fifth	-	-	-	-	$10

CONDITIONS:

1. The display entered in the contest must be of Lipton's Tea alone.
2. The display must remain in the window one week.
3. Each contestant must send to this office a photograph of his display or a careful detailed description of it. Naturally a picture would be better, though a contestant need not incur that expense if he does not wish to. Almost every family now has a kodak-user in it who could photograph a window display.
4. Each contestant if he decides to enter the contest, will kindly drop this office a postal card to that effect.
5. The contest closes November 1, 1915.

The Subscribers' Bargain List

Have you got any goods you don't want? Anything—canned goods, groceries, hardware, dry goods, anything at all that's in good condition, but won't sell for you.

If you will make a price on it we can probably sell it for you in a hurry. Write us about it, stating the quantity, condition and your best price. You might give the original cost, too. We will give it a key number and offer it to our 4,000 subscribers. Your name will not appear unless you want it to. All sales ought to be on a cash basis.

The point is that what won't sell for you may be in everyday demand for somebody else, who will be glad to get your stock of it at a bargain.

There will be no charge for this service anywhere—we do it to help along.

Two Hundred "Turnovers" a Year

Two hundred times a year you turn over capital invested in

Fleischmann's Yeast—

that's about an average.

True, the amount involved is small but the principle is profitable and there's not one cent's worth of dead stock, waste, or loss to figure.

THE VALUE OF BRIGHT STORES

The difficulty of mak- ing a sale—whether it be dry goods or vege- tables, jewelry or shoes s increased tenfold in a poorly lighted store. Other things being equal, the Electrically lighted shop will do more business than the store which uses other illuminants. "Indoor Daylight" can only be obtained by the use of Mazda Electric lamps.

HOW DO YOU DO

when you are up against the grouchy customer, the fellow who over runs his account, the transient cash buyer who only drops in occasionally, the person who always disputes his bill, and up against other troubles when you do not have our Indexed Coupon Books?

Inexpensive—all sizes—f. o. b. destination. Will save trouble—losses—bookkeeping—forgotten charges—disputes. Equally good for cash or credit business or both. Will get the cash.

WE HAVE SOLD MILLIONS OF THEM

You need them. Many of our people have used them for years. Samples and literature free.

Government Says Retail Grocers Charge Exorbitant Profits on Apples

Charges Them With Making Several Hundred Per Cent., Keeping Prices Up and Thus Curtailing Apple Consumption. Clever Apple-selling Scheme of a Chain Store Concern.

Special Correspondence of "Modern Merchant and Grocery World."

Washington, D. C.,

September 30, 1915.

Some matter which should interest retail grocers very much has just left the Government presses and is called "Apple Market Investigations, 1914-1915." It goes into the marketing of apples from the tree down to the consumer, particularly that part of the distribution which goes through the retail grocer. The Government expresses the frank opinion that the retailer makes too much profit on apples.

In studying the various phases of city apple marketing, special attention was given to retail methods and costs. The purpose of this study was chiefly to learn whether the wholesale supply controls the price. The cost of operation as a factor in determining retail prices also was investigated as far as possible.

Retail apple distributors may be classed as follows:—

(a) Fruit stand vendors.

(b) Fancy grocers, fruiterers, etc., catering almost exclusively to high-class or fashionable trade and doing a very extensive credit business.

(c) Grocers catering to a cheaper class of trade, largely upon a cash basis.

(d) Hucksters or street peddlers.

Relatively high prices were charged for apples purchased at fruit stands. Extra fancy North-western and Colorado Jonathans were sold to the dealers during October and November at prices ranging from $1 to $1.25 per box. Apples which grade 150 to the box retailed at two for 5 cents, or $3.75 per box. This meant a gross profit of about 250 per cent. In the 96 size, extra fancy Jonathans sold at three for 10 cents, or $3.20 per box, showing a gross profit of about 200 per cent.

The largest profits were found usually in barreled apples. For instance, New York B grade, 2 inches minimum, approximately 600 apples to the barrel, sold for a cent each or $6 per barrel. These apples cost the retail dealer not over $2 per barrel delivered to his store, allowance being made for jobber's profit and drayage. The investigator saw "A grade" fruit, 2½ inches minimum, averaging about 400 apples per barrel, which cost the retailer not over $3, being displayed for sale at two for 5 cents, or $11.25 per barrel. Such prices prevailed at no less than 25 retail stores visited in one day. Apples were being offered for sale at retail all over New York City at prices ranging from 1 cent each at the cheap corner fruit stands to 50 cents and 80 cents per dozen at the fanciest fruit stores.

Grocers catering to high-class trade buy only the best apples. Extra Fancy Jonathans, Grimes, etc., preferably 138s and 150s size, were purchased at $1 to $1.25 per box. These apples were taken from the box and repacked in small splint trays similar to the peach basket used in a six-basket carrier. Each box of apples filled approximately 10 trays. Each tray sold for 30 cents; hence the box brought $3, representing a gross profit of about $1.75. Extra fancy delicious and winter banana, 72s size, purchased at $2 per box, retailed at 5 cents each, or $3.60 per box. Other sizes and varieties brought corresponding prices. No attempt was made by this class of grocers to stimulate consumption by temporarily reducing prices.

The retail prices quoted above were maintained consistently throughout the 1914 season, regardless of prevailing jobbing prices. The large margins charged by the retailers, for the most part, were due apparently to the small amount of business handled, the perishable nature of the commodity and the cost of operation.

An elaborate and efficient delivery service must be maintained by the grocers, and many small deliveries are made each day at an actual loss to the dealer. A large proportion of the grocery store patrons buy on credit and pay when it becomes convenient. Many of these accounts are never paid. Hence it becomes apparent that the good customer who pays his bill regularly each week, or who pays cash, must suffer for the shortcomings of others. However, there can be little doubt, says the Government expert, that reducing prices would materially increase consumption and in the end result in equally good profits for the retailer. Reduced prices and better business practice should prove to be very beneficial to grower, dealer and consumer.

The profits derived from the sale of cheaper grades of apples to the poorer class of consumers are not so large. It was learned that those catering to such trade operated on a margin of 75 to 100 per cent. of the purchase price. Table 1 shows the purchase and selling prices of certain varieties of apples handled by retail grocers in St. Louis, Mo., on October 13 and 14, 1914:—

By keeping prices at a rather high level, the stores move only a small quantity each day. Considering the fact that overhead and operating charges are not so high as in the case given above, and that there is a greater proportion of strictly cash trade, it appears to the Government, that the margin of profit is rather great. It is reasonable to believe, they say, that sales could be made on a very much closer margin and still offer ample protection and profit to the dealer. These grocers, however, seem to prefer handling small quantities rather than moving large quantities upon small margins. In general, it appeared that retail apple prices were too high this year, "and there is little doubt that the amount used would be increased greatly if grocers would buy in large quantities and sell at a price sufficiently low to attract public attention."

In a middle western market there is a chain of retail stores which handle apples in a very original manner. They sell for cash, make no deliveries and have no telephone in their stores. Their plan is to sell a peck of apples proportionate as cheap as they could sell a barrel. The concern publishes a weekly newspaper which in one week has a circulation of 26,000 copies. In the paper they advertised the commodities on which they would make special prices. On November 4, 1914, they quoted "Excellent cooking apples," which cost them about 15 cents, at 15 cents per peck. The company moved a large quantity of fruit through their various stores at low prices, made a profit of about 50 to 60 cents a barrel, and enabled the consumer to buy far below the usual retail prices.

HOLT.

A Scheme That Pulled.

Cultivating the trade of the farmer by encouraging them to cultivate corn is the novel advertising and trade getting plan inaugurated by a variety store in Ohio.

The store sent out circulars announcing that it wanted to obtain specimens of the finest corn raised in Ohio; also to become better acquainted with the farmers in that section. To realize both of these things the store offered prizes as follows:—

One prize of $15 in merchandise for the largest, finest and best ears of corn received.

One prize of $10 in merchandise for the second largest and best ears.

One prize of $5 in merchandise for the third largest and best ears.

Five prizes of $2 each in merchandise for the next five largest and best ears.

Ten prizes of $1 each in merchandise for the next ten largest and best ears.

It was explained that there was a string attached to the proposition. The purchase of merchandise was necessary to admit a farmer to the contest. All he had to do was merely to bring his corn, properly labeled, and enter it with the rest. The plan was a great success.

The Grand Prize On Cereals

At the Panama-Pacific Exposition Goes to The Quaker Oats Company

At San Francisco there is now being held probably the greatest world's fair in history.

Competition among manufacturers has been tremendously keen to secure the Honors of Merit.

In each class of products there were six grades of awards, one Grand Prize and five lesser awards as follows:

GRAND PRIZE . FIRST AND HIGHEST HONOR
Medal of Honor	Second grade award
Gold Medal	Third grade award
Silver Medal	Fourth grade award
Bronze Medal	Fifth grade award
Honorable Mention	Sixth grade award

In each kind of goods only one Grand Prize was given.

In the Cereal List it went to The Quaker Oats Company

In addition to the Grand Prize for merit on Quaker Oats, the Grand Prize was also given on machinery covering some of the processes of the manufacture and packing of this product.

Read This to See if You Figure Profits Correctly

Note Particularly What Success Has Come to Merchants Who Have Known the Business They Were Doing, What it Cost Them to Do It, and What Profit They Were Making. What a Ten Dollar Girl Can Do.

There has been a mass—I might almost say a mess—of material written on the subject of figuring profits. One can get twisted into a thousand mental knots trying to read some of it. It surely is a knotty problem, but some of the attempted solutions only seem to tie more knots in it. Let us see if we can do some simple straight thinking on the subject.

To start right let's settle on what profit is. One man says profit is the difference between cost and selling price. If an article costs $8 and sells for $12, the profit is $4. True, says another man, but that $4 is only the gross profit; out of it have to come the expenses, and if there is anything left that is net profit.

So then we have two kinds of profit—gross profit and net profit. And since these terms are apt to be confusing I am going to use the term "mark-up" to mean the whole difference between cost and selling price and the term "profit" to mean only what is left of mark-up after expense of doing business has been deducted.

Thus if a merchant sells goods for $50,000 that have cost him $30,000, his mark-up is $20,000. If his expenses are $10,000 he has left a profit of $10,000.

Now just a word about these figures as expressed in percentage. They can be stated in either one of two ways, both of which are correct. If we use the cost of goods, \$30,000, as the basis, our mark-up of \$20,000 is $66\frac{2}{3}$ per cent., our expense of \$10,000 is $33\frac{1}{3}$ per cent. and our profit of \$10,000 is also $33\frac{1}{3}$ per cent. If we use total sale of goods, \$50,000 as the basis, our mark-up of \$20,000 is 40 per cent., our expense of \$10,000 is 20 per cent. and our profit of \$10,000 is 20 per cent.

While either of these sets of percentage is correct, it would be wrong to mix the two. For, if a merchant should figure on a basis of his past year's sales that his cost of doing business was 20 per cent. and his profit was 20 per cent., making 40 per cent. mark-up, and should then invest \$30,000 in new goods and mark them up only 40 per cent. of \$30,000, which is \$12,000, he would find at the end of the year that after paying expenses of \$10,000 he would have only \$2,000 profit instead of the expected \$10,000. Forty per cent. mark-up based on selling price equals $66\frac{2}{3}$ per cent. based on cost.

Undoubtedly some retailers have erred in marking up goods because of a confusion of the two bases on which percentage may be figured. Your problem as I see it is not how much you should mark up your goods, but how to squeeze out a respectable profit between the cost which is fixed by the maker or the jobber and the selling price which is fixed by competition. And that we must admit is some sizable problem in these days of sharp competition and rising costs.

The first great essential is to know, not guess, what your mark-up, expense and profit are. It is a good thing to know at the end of the year what it has been, but is better by far to know at least each month, and better still, if possible, each week. I make the positive assertion that there is not a merchant whose business is too small to afford a $10 a week girl if she does nothing else except keep you posted week by week on just what you are doing in the way of making profits. The $500 you would spend during the year would give you the facts and figures that would enable you to make several times that $500 in extra profits.

The most expensive thing you can do is to guess. The most profitable thing you can do is to know—and to know all the time as you go along.

What is the most costly thing you handle in your store?

Don't think of the highest priced goods, for that answer is wrong. (The most costly thing you have anything to do with is time—minutes, hours, days, weeks and months. Let me prove this:—

Suppose my average expense is 20 per cent. of the sale. Suppose I buy a flying machine for $5,000 to sell for $10,000. Will I make a profit over my 20 per cent. expense?

If I sell it within a year, yes. I'll take off $2,000 for expense and have $3,000 left for profit.

But suppose it is five years before I sell it?

My expenses are 20 per cent. for each one of the five years, or 100 per cent. for the period. I have used up the whole $10,000 I got for it and am out the $5,000 I paid for the machine.

All because of the time it took to turn my investment into money again.

Suppose I had bought instead of a flying machine, $5,000 worth of chewing gum, candy, soda water or anything else that would sell rapidly—in short time—for only $7,000. If my expenses were still 20 per cent., or $1,400, the profit would be only $600. But if I sold this amount ten times over in a year, I'd get $6,000 profit out of it.

Do you see how speeding up time increases the real profit though the margin is much smaller?

Therein, to my mind, appears the only way to work out a profit where cost of goods and selling prices are pretty firmly fixed by causes beyond our control.

We have assumed that 20 per cent. of the sale was the expense of doing business. That figure was obtained by dividing the expense for an entire year, $10,000, by the sales for the year, $50,000. I believe that this is a wrong way of figuring the percentage cost of doing business. I believe that it is wrong to use a percentage so obtained to guide the merchant in the conduct of his business. We haven't yet taken into consideration the capital invested. We bought $30,000 worth of goods during the year but we may not have had $30,000 invested in goods at any one time.

Suppose we had an average investment in goods of $15,000. This means that on the average we turned our goods over twice during the year. Some of them we turned over only once, others twice, others four times, some ten times.

I have shown that we can afford to operate on a smaller mark-

Kellogg Co.'s Fixed Price Plan Seems Be Smashed by Court Decree

Company Consents to Entering of Decree Against It Forbidding It from Fixing Resale Prices and Attempting to Carry Them Out. Seems on Surface to Conflict with Other Decisions.

During the week the news has been telegraphed over the country from Detroit, Mich., that the United States Government suit against the Kellogg Toasted Corn Flakes Co. had been ended by the Kellogg Co. consenting to the entering of a decree against it. The consenting to the decree surprised the trade very much, because the Kellogg Co. had been very insistent upon its "square deal" policy, and the trade rather expected that it would fight the case through and fight it hard.

While exact news of the decree and what it contained is not yet forthcoming, it appears from the dispatches that the company is enjoined from pursuing its former plan of maintaining fixed prices on Kellogg Toasted Corn Flakes. The plan in brief was this: The Kellogg Co. sometime ago, in order to get itself in a position where it could claim the extra monopoly given by the patent laws, patented something on its carton and thereafter claimed to be selling a patented article. The theory was that being the owner of a patented article, it could absolutely fix the price at which it should be sold, and if anybody violated it, it could claim its patent rights were being infringed. To carry this view out the company pasted stickers on its packages fixing both wholesale and retail prices.

In spite of this the Government began its suit against the Kellogg

NOTE.—A portion of an address delivered before the Pennsylvania Retail Merchants' Association at its convention in Connaught Park a few days ago.

, claiming that its plan was in restraint of trade. The following is an extract from a statement said to be given out by the United States Attorney-General in Washington, and presumed to be correct:—

The decree assesses the costs against the company, finds the company's plan of selling its product to be in restraint of trade and enjoins from affixing notice of "tying contracts" against cut prices to the packages of corn flakes.

The injunction also requires the company to desist from requiring bidders to enter into agreement or understanding to resell toasted corn flakes at a price fixed by the defendant and from suggesting to the bidders, in writing or otherwise, that if they fail or refuse to observe the fixed price, they will be cut off from a further supply of said product.

The company also is ordered to desist from exacting from detailers any agreement or understanding that they shall sell the product at a price fixed by the defendant, and from suggesting to retailers that if they fail or refuse to observe the fixed price, they will be cut off from further supply.

At first glance and without further information, it appears that the decree conflicts with some other decisions, notably the Cream of Wheat decision and the decision in the phonograph case, discussed in last week's Legal Department. However, it will be discussed further as soon as a verbatim copy is received. Of course, a decree entered by agreement has not the force of a decree entered by the court as a disposition of a contested case.

Eliminating the Middleman in Washington, D. C.

John H. Sherman, Superintendent of Weights, Measures and Markets Department of the District of Columbia, plans to have a plan by which consumers can eliminate the middleman. He operates it through club or community league buying. The largest league has 600 members, another 200 members, while others flourish on a membership of three or four families. Sherman lays down the following rules for wholesale purchasing by clubs or families in his lectures:—

1. Organize groups of from three to ten families.
2. Make them business groups and not friendship groups.
3. Confine membership to one area of two or less blocks.
4. Select one member to do all the purchasing.
5. Buy wholesale.
6. Require deposits from members before purchases are made, and then pay cash.
7. Order carefully and then stand by your orders.
8. Buy early.
9. Buy only products that are in their natural season.
10. Purchase only after examining samples of several dealers.
11. Distribute shares to members the day of delivery from wholesale market.
12. Don't expect a plan like this to work out without inconveniences and sacrifices; it is the elimination of these that you pay for in retail stores.

WITH THE EDITOR

A certain salesman up to last year was traveling a territory in Eastern

Putting Pep in Salesmen.

Pennsylvania for a well known house, whose manager, while unimpeachable in every way, was unbending in his conservatism and believed that many modern methods descended to cheapness and even illegitimacy.

For example, the manager of this house did not believe in writing pushing letters to salesmen. If it had any effect at all, it inspired them, he argued, with false enthusiasm. If their own work did not give them the enthusiasm, nothing would.

The salesman referred to made a fair record with that house. It compared very favorably with the record of any other salesman and without doubt he could have remained there indefinitely.

He was offered another position by another house, to travel precisely the same territory, and sell almost precisely the same class of goods. The head of this house did believe in modern methods, among them writing letters to salesmen, and a good strong typewritten push got to every man in the first mail on Monday morning. The result was that from the start the salesman in question did twenty per cent. more business than he had done under almost the same conditions for his other house. He said it was the letters more than anything else—the feeling that the house was after him, watching him, sympathizing with him, in touch with him.

What salesman, for instance, could fail to be appealed to by the following, which is part of a letter sent out to its salesmen during the week by a well known wholesale tea house:—

Conceding that we have the stock, the next thing is its profitable distribution. This is up to our representatives. They are all interested in the business equally as we are, and we expect them to use the same intelligence in selling the goods as if the ownership was theirs entirely, and miss nothing without first getting a bid. This is where salesmanship comes in.

Now this month we want to make a supreme effort all along the line, miss nothing, wire in best bids, give us all the information, ask for anything you think you can sell that is not listed, and we will roll up such a big October business that it will eclipse all past records.

Work hard on every buyer on your territory, miss none. So often when a salesman can't sell a buyer he writes in that this particular buyer's business is drying up, etc., but as a rule the "wish is father to the thought," and there is nothing in it. If business don't come easy, work that much harder to get it, but get it. Consumption is going on all the time, tea is being used and it is being purchased, and you want to get out of your beaten tracks and secure more business.

The National Association of Credit Men sends the following:—
Right.

The attorney without conscience may be likened to the typhus germ, uncontrollable, seeking as its prey a debilitated constitution. One of these conscienceless practitioners received into his office a few weeks since a merchant who had borne a good reputation, but troubles had of late come upon him and he was harassed and unable to tell which way to turn. Though he felt disaster coming, it never occurred to him to treat creditors in any but a fair spirit. But it all seemed so easy when the attorney, after a few leading questions, had sized up the situation. The thing to do was to determine upon a settlement, figures which the creditors would nibble at; make them hungry by telling them it was far more than they would get if bankruptcy entered to waste the estate; never minding if it were only about one-third of what the estate could comfortably pay if the creditors received their full entitlement. The debilitated constitution succumbed. The conspiracy was hatched, communications misrepresenting the debtor's condition were mailed and settlement was effected. Now this is no fanciful story. It is the way the case in mind went, and it is the way hundreds of others are going—why? Because creditors are so prone to accept a settlement offer because it costs to fight. In scourge and epidemic we must fight the individual cases in order to break the disease, and these settlement offers at 15 and 30 per cent. are approaching epidemic proportions. The cure is in our hands, and as credit men we must expose the lying conspiracies which the clan of attorneys cited above is responsible for. Briefly, do not accept offers of settlement unless an investigation has been made by a Creditors' Committee in which you have the utmost confidence.

I am in a position to say without qualification that this happens every day. There never was a time when fraudulent bankruptcy settlements appeared easier to put across than they are to-day. It is the rule, not the exception, that the average creditor, when offered a 25 per cent. settlement by a debtor whom the creditor practically knows could pay twice that, will take it rather than fight. He argues that a fight will be expensive, prolonged, worrisome and unprofitable. Even if he gets his 50 per cent. in the end, he would be no better off if he had spent half of it in fighting. He finds other creditors unresponsive to any invitation to join him, and in the end he helps the debtor consummate his fraud.

Business men should look at these things as matters of principle. Of course they are largely matters of money too, but cases arise where the right deserves to be defended.

The world is full of squealers and welchers, it seems—business men who act on their own judgment, and when that judgment is proven wrong, attempt to crawl out. It is cheap and despicable. Everybody feels refreshed when he meets a man who sees the thing through, whatever it is he has given his word for.

Apropos of the above, the sugar market has been considerably uncertain recently, and the wise buyer bought only what he needed and if possible, bought it from day to day. On Thursday of last week the price of granulated dropped 10 points. Before that day a local jobbing house sold, among others, four retail buyers, of course at the price existing at that time. One bought on Tuesday, another on Thursday and the other two on Wednesday—all before the advance. Every one, when the market, late on Thursday, declined, claimed that the jobber should rebate him. I don't criticize that. It does no harm to ask for anything, and if you can get it, it is so much found. But to contend that there was a real right to a rebate, under the above conditions, is something else. Such a contention would be ridiculous, always provided that the salesman, in taking these orders, did not represent to the buyers that he had special reason to believe the market would remain stationary. If he did that, and the business was placed because of it, of course the firm would be morally bound to rebate.

Sauce for the goose is sauce for the gander. If a retailer is entitled to a rebate because the market declined, he should by the same token be willing to pay an advance if the market went up. How many would be willing to do that?

I commend the following to the attention of the wholesale grocers who are just now attempting to find some way of meeting the competition of retailers' co-operative buying organizations, and of helping their customers to meet the competition of Economy Stores. It comes to this paper from the Bureau of Business Research of Harvard University:—

The Chicago Association of Credit Men, through its Credit Co-operation Committee, has undertaken an active campaign for the improvement of accounting methods in retail stores in the city of Chicago. The retail grocers are the first to be approached, later other retailers will be given assistance. After careful consideration the committee has decided to use the Harvard System of Accounts for Retail Grocers as the basis upon which to work. The committee will give personal assistance to any retailers who may have difficulties in starting the system.

With no disposition to reflect the least upon the local jobbers, it is true that they are doing not one thing to-day to aid the retailer in any basic way, to make him a better business man—even to make him a better customer for themselves. They offer him merchandise, sell him as cheap as they can carry him, if he needs it, to the limit of their ability, and that is the extent of their relations with him. As the great field of service, so profitably tilled by merchants in other lines, as in the above case in Chicago, is totally neglected.

Ill-Known Grocers Puncture Fool Newspaper Statement.

Philadelphia, Pa., Sept. 23, 1915.
The Editor.

Dear Sir:—We agree with you entirely that it is a shame that a large daily should write so thoughtlessly about the loss incurred through bad debts by grocers.

For many years our losses in this way have not averaged one-tenth of one per cent., which looks very small compared with the estimate of the "Ledger," saying 15 to 20 per cent.

Such things are a reflection on the honesty of the public. Our experience is that there are few people who are not honest, especially in paying for the goods that come on their tables.

We resent any such statements as a reflection on the public.

Yours truly,

HANSCOM BROS.

The above refers to a statement recently published in the "Public Ledger" that the bad debts of fancy grocers ran from 15 to 20 per cent. The statement was reproduced and merely criticised in a recent issue of this paper. Hanscom Bros. are local large central grocers, about which the "Ledger" writer was talking, and they say that their losses don't average one-tenth of one per cent.

Who Knows Anything About This Scheme?

York, Pa., Sept. 28, 1915.
The Editor.

Dear Sir:—What can you tell us about "Our Supply Stores, Inc.," which gives its address as "Executive offices, Real Estate Trust Building, Philadelphia." They are represented by "O. S. Betts."

Respectfully, E. R. S.

We have gotten but little information about this concern. It is not in any of the directories and mercantile rating books, and nobody seems to have heard about it. We sent a representative to the Real Estate Trust Building to look it up. The name is not in the directory of that building, but a porter thought he could find the desk room in No. 742. It did, but its name was not on the door. Nobody was in charge, and the whole scheme appears to be Mr. Betts. No literature seems to be obtainable, and the scheme seems to be quite small and trifling.

Does Anyone Know Such a System.

Oneonta, N. Y., Sept. 29, 1915.

To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—A little advice is what I want. I am doing a credit and cash business, and every clerk goes to the cash register and rings up his cash and every clerk goes to the accounting system and makes his charges. Now, I want to get a system where one man will see to all credit and cash sales. What system do you recommend?

Yours truly,

L. PALMER.

We have never heard of such a system. Has any subscriber? Of course it could be done by having a bookkeeper and cashier and having all the clerks go to him or her instead of to the cash register or the accounting system.

A Flour Agent on the Job.

Columbia, Pa., Sept. 27, 1915.

To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—Will you kindly give us the name and address of the firm from whom we can buy Ceresota flour at $6.65, the price quoted in to-day's issue of the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World."

The Columbia Milling Co., the local agent here, are charging us $8 per barrel to-day.

Thanking you in advance for a prompt reply, we are,

Sincerely,

J. J. & W. A. FORD.

The price of $6.65 was given to the manager of our price columns just before the last issue went to press, by Wilson & Richards, wholesale grocers, Girard avenue and Howard street, Philadelphia. As these words are being written, the price has declined to $6.25.

Sweet potatoes are cheap this year when compared to last. The present price is 35 cents a basket, as against 60 cents a year ago.

Wildey Continues His Talks About Fighting Mail Order Competition

Says the Local Merchant Can Render Service Which the Mail Order House Cannot.

I think the retail dealer is in somewhat the same position as the lemon growers of California, with this difference: they had their lemon taken away from them, while we were being handed one. They had 50 cents a box duty taken off by the Government, and immediately the railroads added 50 cents a box for transportation. The service rendered by the retailer is not something that will permit the manufacturer to step in and demand a higher price for his product. The mail-order houses recognize the fact that the hardest thing they have to overcome is the superior service of the retailer. They know it is impossible for them to attempt to compete in service.

Here is the situation: If a farmer wants to buy a wagon, and the retail price is $100, and the mail order price is $90, with $10 for freight and superior service, then the mail-order house has a small chance of selling that wagon; but if the local price is $100 and the mail-order price $70, then there is $20 to be accounted for. And the situation today is that the mail-order houses are demanding a price which will enable them to more than offset the superior service of the local dealer, and the mail-order house centers the idea on the price, and not on the service.

It is therefore up to you to begin now to fight this price discrimination, and to emphasize the fact that you are rendering a service which is reasonably worth something to your trade; and to the manufacturer. This little service advertising is beginning to bear fruit now, and the consumer is beginning to realize that this service is of value to them, and that by dealing with the local dealer they get the service thrown in for good measure. We are drifting to that point where the consumer refuses to do otherwise than compare the mail-order cash price in Chicago with your credit price on the shelves, and to figure the difference as an overcharge on the part of the local merchant.

If you want to know the value which the mail-order house places on service, read their catalogue. They quote nails for instance at $2 per hundred pounds, and five pounds for 15 cents, the difference in the price for the service. Screw eyes are 12 cents per gross, but if you want less than a gross the price is doubled for the extra cost of the service. Take a certain size of screws that are 60 cents per gross, and in smaller quantities 8 cents per dozen.

Now don't draw the wrong conclusion from this recitation of the mail-order house prices for service. I am not suggesting that you add 50 per cent. to cover service. But the mail-order house emphasizes price, and puts the soft pedal on service. If you are rendering a superior service to that rendered by the mail-order house, you are justified in emphasizing that fact to your customers.

Let us go to this question of price discrimination. I am impressed with the lack of backbone on the part of manufacturers and most retailers. The manufacturers claim that they cannot keep their products out of the hands of the catalogue houses. They tell me that it is impossible for them to keep their products out of the hands of the catalogue houses. I presume there is no product more widely distributed than Arm & Hammer soda, and yet the mail-order houses do not list it, and the reason they give is that the manufacturers refuse to supply them. They guessed at the reason for this, and their guess was that they were selling at 5 cents a package, while the retailer was selling it at 8 to 10 cents. It seems clear to me that if it is possible to keep Arm & Hammer soda out of the hands of the catalogue houses, it is possible to keep other products out of their hands. I contend that if the catalogue houses pay the same price for traps and Ingersoll watches that I pay for them, they cannot sell them and make the same profit that I make on them. The catalogue houses make a price of $1.70 on a dozen traps and an Ingersoll watch. If you make that price you lose, while the catalogue house has made 13 per cent.

Every manufacturer who grants a catalogue house an inside price to induce them to maintain the retail price is doing all he can to compel every other manufacturer to do the same thing. Gentlemen, it is up to you to write to the manufacturers and insist upon a square deal. If there is any one thing that the manufacturer doesn't seem to understand, it is that the retail dealer needs less of protection and more of equal opportunity. But when ten millions of dollars of net profits are taken by one mail-order house in twelve months is not sufficient to arouse you, it would be but an idle waste of time for me to attempt to induce you to take any action. If we had even one man in each community who would go into this fight within two years we could have the mail-order houses on the run. Imagine every dealer writing to the manufacturer and demanding that he give him a price that would enable him to meet the catalogue house prices! How long would continue? Don't you see how the life of the catalogue houses must depend upon their ability to secure inside prices? Tell me then how is that 999 out of every 1,000 retail dealers are asleep? When is the jobber going to awake and help with this fight?

Selling Talks With Clerks

BY A MAN WHO HAS BEEN ONE

Conducted by W. E. SWEENEY, Manager for L. Lehman & Co.'s Department Food Store, Dover, N. J.

Try a Friday Night Celery Window.—An empty barrel is a good thing to tie the bunches around. Top of that a half barrel or a Fels soap box makes a striking show when your glass is clean and your window is lit up. And it's a dandy background for your outside show Saturday—where an outside display is allowed by the city. The reason this kind of a window is good is because it is odd. The odder the window the more lookers you get.

A man that loves to do things different filled six clean butter tubs full of sour pickles and put them in the window; one was marked so much a piece, one so much for three, one so much for six, one so much for twelve, one so much for fifteen and one so much for twenty. He sold pickles. It would have taken twice as much time and labor to have placed six different kinds of grocery goods there just as neat as a pin, but the crowd would have passed the window by uncommenting and unimpressed.

To me the average window lacks originality. Cut out conglomeration. Cereals, canned goods, teas and coffees in one window is out-dated and outrageous.

Selling Tokays.—There's a little handleless splint that can be bought that holds about two pounds of grapes. you'll line about 20 or 25 of these with white paper and fill them with Tokay or California Malagas, marking them, say, 50 per cent. over the bill cost and working up all the loose ones wrapping up the basket and all when the sale is made, you will sell more grapes and make more money than the old-fashioned way of selling by the pound, letting the customer select nice bunches and leaving on the bottom of your original square basket the and unsightly ones to go at any price.

Cloudy Vision Is Bad.—There's saying that so and so "can't see further than his nose." In other words, good things come and good things go, and he goes on forever unmoved.

This cloudy vision is self-imposed, an awfully expensive imposition to put on yourself. It may come from a grudge. It may be because you're discouraged. But knock the props from under the "cause" and look out—look out and above and beyond yourself until you see the blessed golden sun, the of faith and hope and success. Throw cobwebs. Brush them aside and get a big, strong, clear outlook on things. No power on earth can keep you back but you.

The New York Letter

Discussion Over the Kellogg Fixed Price Decision. Friends of Stevens Bill Will Hold Second Conference. Canned Goods to Be Advertised. Market Summary.

Correspondence of "Modern Merchant and Grocery World."

New York, October 1, 1915.

Considerable interest is manifested here in the decision against Kellogg Toasted Corn Flakes in this city which the Government brought against it for attempt to limit resale prices, and much surprise is expressed that this was a recent decree, which indicated that Kellogg Co. laid down in its contract and permitted the Government to set the decree against it by its consent. The Kellogg people misled the trade here to believe it was in this fight to death that it would allow no obstacles to interfere with its desire of what it has always called "square deal" policy.

The trade here are not yet thoroughly posted as to the substance of the decree and as to exactly what it covers. They do know, however, that the Kellogg Co. is prohibited by the Government from limiting the prices, both wholesale and retail, through the notice which it has recently placed upon its cartons. Kellogg Co. placed the notice upon the theory that its cartons were patented, and therefore anybody who bought was an infringer if he sold in violation of the terms of the notice.

Friends of the Stevens bill, which would give manufacturers the right to fix the retail selling price on proprietary products, will hold another meeting in the interest of the measure in this city some time in November. Preliminary to this meeting a conference of a number of retailers was held at the Hotel Astor Thursday evening. This was participated in by the following:—

Chairman, Dr. W. C. Anderson, Kings County Pharmaceutical Society; first vice-chairman, John G. Emmer, Talking Machine Men.; second vice-chairman, John M. Hlmeier, Hardware Dealers' Association; secretary, Carl E. Ackman, Photographic Dealers' Association of New York; treasurer, John Steeneck, New York Retail Grocers' Association. Executive committee, B. Wieting, New York Retail Grocers' Association; J. P. Andrine, Hudson County Retail Hardware Association; Henry Link, Stationers' Association; T. France, Kings County Pharmaceutical Association; E. A. Boetzel, Metropolitan Association Retail Druggists; Louis Berger, New York Pharmaceutical Association; George E. Huetner, Bronx County Pharmaceutical Association; Henry Mielke, Talking Machine Men., Inc.; J. Shuloff, Williamsburg Retail Druggists' Society; H. Douglass, Hardware Dealers' Association; S. B. V. Swann, German Apothecary Society; B. Colle, New York County Pharmaceutical Society; Charles Recht, Yorkville Merchants' Association; J. W. It appears now as if the plan to do heavy advertising to consumers on canned goods was about to materialize. Information reached this city during the week that A. P. Williams, of R. C. Williams & Co. had introduced at the recent executive meeting of the National Wholesale Grocers' Association the following resolution, which was adopted:—

It is the sense of this meeting that a committee on publicity campaign advertising canned foods be appointed and undertake to raise the funds and carry on this work immediately, that the subject be submitted to the National Brokers' Association for their consideration, and that one member of the National Wholesale Grocers' Association be appointed to confer with the brokers and canners' associations' committees.

Mr. Williams was at the same time appointed a committee to confer with the representatives of the brokerage and canning interests for the purpose of laying foundation for the campaign.

There has been a rather decided war during the week here between the various salmon interests, on future pink Alaska salmon. All packers a week or two ago named 75 cents in a large way, f. o. b. Coast on this grade of salmon, 1915 pack. Shortly after this, cutting began, and before it was over prices were down to 65 cents. Packers say they were driven to it by the fact that brokers had been making all sorts of secret discounts on salmon which they sold to Eastern buyers, and that the concerns which forbade their brokers doing this lost business by it constantly. The decline is unparalleled and brings pink salmon, which is a very fair grade of table salmon, down to about the

Backing Up What We Say

When you sell an advertised article, and the article proves the truth of all that's said in the advertising, it helps you.

National Biscuit Company products make for good trade and good will, because they back up, in every particular, all that is said of their high quality and goodness. These famous crackers and cookies, wafers and snaps, are national favorites, in constant demand. Hence, they are the most profitable line a grocer can sell.

If you do not know this is so, prove it by stocking with a good assortment of In-er-seal Trade Mark packages.

level of chums, which opened at 65 cents.

There is a lively controversy on between the wholesale fruit dealers of this city and the New York State Department of Foods and Markets. As has been reported in this correspondence, the State Department is organizing fruit auctions for the purpose of eliminating the middle man to a certain extent, and reducing the cost of apples. The jobbers, who are the principal handlers of apples, have boycotted the sales and at recent sales, at which 80,000 barrels of apples were advertised to be sold, there was not a single bid. The growers went but the jobbers did not.

SUMMARIZED MARKET CON- DITIONS.

Tea somewhat steadier with an advance reported in London in low grade India-Ceylons. Japans are also somewhat firmer. The general line steady to firm.—Coffee about unchanged on last week's basis. The general feeling is somewhat easier for actual coffees.—Sugar down to 4.95 for granulated. Domestic beet granulated 4.65 to 4.70. Raws heavy and weak.—New seeded raisin prices were made of 7 cents for fancy in cartons, outside packers quoting a fraction less.—Dried fruits generally quiet. Currants strong.—Pink salmon cut and demoralized. Other salmon unchanged. Market quiet.—Canned tomatoes firm at 85 to 87½ cents in a large way, f. o. b. for Maryland 3s. Other canned vegetables quiet and unchanged.—Wheat still somewhat excited, with a fair demand. No important change for the week. Flour has settled down to a fairly low level with a good demand.

We Can't Bluff You

¶ When we try to interest you in our plan of selling Teas and Coffees by mail, it's utterly impossible for us to bluff you in any way. We've got to do as we say in order to get you and hold you.

¶ We've got to match the sample that you send us, and quote a lower price than you've been paying, or we'll get nowhere.

¶ Where, therefore, is the risk of trying our plan out? Meanwhile don't forget that goods sold direct can always be sold for less than goods sold through salesmen.

where we turn the goods more often. I think we should also charge up a smaller percentage of expense on goods turned more often. Consider this:—

The expense for rent, salaries, light, etc., is a daily expense. It should really go on the goods on hand every day. The goods that stay longest on the shelves should stand the greatest charge for rent. That's what we rent our building for—to hold goods. They should stand the greatest charge for other expenses because it costs more to hold goods and to sell the kind of goods that don't move rapidly.

The ideal way, if it didn't take too much bookkeeping, would be to tax each article so much a day for every day it remains unsold. Then we would get after the goods that were eating themselves up in taxes and if we couldn't move them faster we would have a sale and replace them with goods that did sell rapidly. We ought to figure our yearly expenses down to a certain per cent. not of the sale price, but of the average inventory and divided by 365 days; then let each article carry that percentage multiplied by the number of days it remained in stock.

To do this with every single article would require altogether too much accounting. It wouldn't pay to get the figures. But we should keep the principle in mind at all times that the small mark-up repeated many times a year exceed the larger mark-up turned only once a year, when it comes to the profit that we are in business to get.

And we can get near enough figures along this idea that will guide us better than lumped together yearly figures if we divide the goods we carry into a few general lines; keep a perpetual inventory of cost and selling price (which in many businesses is simple and practical), figure separate expenses of each line, rent, for instance, being proportioned on the display value of the actual space used, and then charge those expenses, say, monthly, or even weekly, as a percentage of the cost value of the stock on hand.

Such a perpetual inventory with the accompanying data on the quantity of each article sold, makes a wonderfully valuable guide to proper buying. Merchants who use this plan know to a nicety what the demand will be at any season of the year. Their records of preceding years show then just what quantities to contract for and on what dates to specify delivery.

The plan enables a merchant to hold down his investment in any one line to the minimum and to turn his dollars over many times a year. With the lowered investment in present lines he has capital to expand in other lines that help carry his expense load, therefore lower it proportionally and that add to his profits.

A haberdasher in Chicago built his business to the point where he averaged a thousand sales a day in a little store forty feet square—a gross business of more than $200,000 a year.

In this little store he kept a wider variety of goods, and made more real net profit than most stores with five times his space and ten to fifteen times his capital and expense.

The secret of his success was in the small amount of stock which he carried and the frequency with which he turned his capital.

He planned to keep just one day's supply of stock on the shelves and in the show cases. Every night his stock was replenished just enough to replace the goods removed by the day's sales.

Accurate records for several years enabled this merchant to know almost exactly how much he would sell of every line each day and to make arrangements in advance for this sale.

He kept a two weeks' supply of each line in his stock room on the fourth floor, where rent cost him very much less than he paid on the first floor.

Each night he sent down to the store just enough of each kind of stock for one day's business.

By knowing almost exactly how much goods he would be able to sell of each line, he was able to make quantity contracts with his jobbers on many lines, at quantity prices, with semi-monthly deliveries and monthly bills. He paid after he sold.

If his records showed for instance that he would need 1,000 shirts of a certain size, his order to the jobber or manufacturer would be for 1,000 shirts to be delivered in quantities of three dozen every other week.

Every month he got a bill from the manufacturer or jobber for six dozen shirts. But he had probably sold five dozen of them before the bill came, so he could take the discount with money he had already received from the sale of the goods.

He invested $10 a week in salary for a young woman who gave him whole time to tabulating sales and expense figures.

The report this young woman gave him every day showed not only the number of sales for the day of every line of goods carried but it also showed a comparison with the preceding day, the same day of the preceding week and the same day of the preceding year.

If you asked him, "How's business?" he could tell you, for his policy was to know. He didn't guess at his figures.

It cost him $10 a week, a sum which would scare some retailer but it enabled him to do a gross business of $4,500 a week on a capital that was less than some retailers use to do a business of $100,000 a week.

Richard Brune, who has made an unusual record in the grocery business, came to the United States at the age of twelve, unable to read or write English, and with $3 his total capital. After seven years of hardships, the young man went into the grocery business in New Haven, Conn. There he learned through necessity several valuable lessons in retailing.

With stock worth $200 the young merchant started in business. His working capital was limited to $100. The owner of the building loaned him the fixtures. All about him were the price-cutting competitors who had driven his predecessor out of business. Brune realized that he was within the narrow limits of meager capital and restricted margins. His only way to progress was through small purchases and quick sales. He dared not buy more than he knew he could sell.

Thus the novice in retailing learned in one concrete lesson at least two of the profoundest secrets of modern retailing. He learned to make a few dollars do the work of many by performing simple tasks in merchandising over and over again in the shortest time. He learned that only by selling on narrow margins could he compete at all.

These were the two phases of reeling he became acquainted with st. He was introduced to them his friend in disguise, "limited capital." So he was able to compete; to stay in business; and to prosper. Writing of his earlier experience a short time ago, Brune said:—

"I found that by this plan I could go further ahead in one year than merchants doing business in the old way could in five."

In less than two years after he had started in business Brune sold out, worth $5,000 in cash, and started out to find a larger field. He bought another store in Saw-ree, Cal., a suburb of Los Angeles, where, in four years more—at the age of 25—he owns two stores and is doing an annual business of $10,000.

All through his experience Brune stuck to the principles he had laid out in his little store. Behind this achievement by a twelve-year-old boy without education; unable to read or write English—and a possessor of $3 in "coin of the realm."

David Pender went to school only a few years. At thirteen he started work in a grocery to help support his widowed mother. For five years he plodded on. At twenty-five he possessed not a dollar. To pay his railroad fare from home in Tarboro, N. C., to Norfolk he borrowed $10. In Norfolk he found a job. Two years later he managed to get hold of a small amount, which he bought without a cent of his own capital.

His business flourished. From this the story reads like a page of fiction. In a little more than two years he owned the business free and clear. Then the store was moved into a double store room which offered four times the space. At the rising merchant moved to the down town shopping district. He took a double store room, then the room next door, then a third, then a fifth. Needing more space, he added a store room that extended in another direction, but ended at the rear. Then he utilized every foot of the second story of the buildings. Later he established a department of his business in a four-story building across street from his five-front store. He did this in the face of the severe competition; the target of numerous price-cutting competitors, all bigger than himself.

But Pender applied the business principles he had discovered when he was the smallest grocer in Norfolk. He had 250 competitors then—the largest enjoying a gross annual business of $300,000. Pender steered for the open, one by one, as the autumn leaf fall, his competitors gave up the race. When the last of them withdrawn Pender stood supreme. His gross business mounted up in his sixth year of business, receipts reached $385,000. The next year they mounted to $400,000; then up, up they soared to the million dollar mark.

Pender has 250 competitors but he is now bigger than all of them combined. He does half the grocery business in Norfolk, they, the other 250, divide the other half.

Pender has been in business himself sixteen years and is now 41 years old. He owns every dollar's worth of the business personally—has never taken outside capital.

So much for the history of Pender's success. That is the superficial part of the story. Underneath lie the well-grounded principles that must underlie every success in business. Pender presses the cardinal principle of them all in the three word motto: "Know the truth."

Amplly backing the Pender story of business success is an accounting system that is a marvel of simplicity, though simple in form. It has grown from a small system then devised in his first little store. There he had been face to face with competition that demanded narrow margins of profit and rapid turnover. He faced that competition with practically no working capital.

As the business grew its various phases were grouped in classifications best handled independently. To-day separate rentals are charged against each department equivalent to what the space would be worth if it were leased to an outsider. Figures showing the sales, costs and profits are boiled down into comprehensive reports that tell to the satisfaction of a percentage what each each department is contributing to the success of the business.

Through comparisons made possible by this boiled down information, exact conditions are known at times. And there is no such thing as "guess" in the Pender vocabulary.

It is a matter of fact there are hundreds of little details in which Pender has departed from the accepted practices of retailing and fitted his procedure to modern conditions. His business is a remarkable example of the consistent development of practical ideas in merchandising. It reflects the keen business insight of the man who has built what he has built is the largest home-trade grocery business in the United States.

There is just one big secret behind the success of these and other men in the retail field who have gone far ahead of the average merchant. They have substituted the certainty of facts for the uncertainty of guess work in the conduct of their business. They know the cost of handling each line of goods. They know whether to push a line or to drop it and take another. They know what to invest in a line and at what season.

They guide their growing business with the charts of experience, boiled down to comparative tables of costs, selling prices, expenses and profits. Their investment in getting these facts they regard as the most essential investment they make.

They have proved that a comprehensive, yet simple and workable, plan for figuring profits as one goes along is the only hope of making profits anywhere near as large as they ought to be.

ASSOCIATION NEWS.*National Wholesale Grocers' Association.

The National Wholesale Grocers' Association has issued the following criticism and suggestion regarding the present method of selling future California lima beans:

A great deal has been said about the California Lima Bean Contract and in the opinion of your Contract Committee, the present future clause contained therein affords every advantage to the seller without fair protection to the buyer.

For instance—"in case a crop is rain damaged, under the present future contract, the buyer is forced to take them, provided they are re-cleaned."

Another point in the same clause is that in case of destruction of half or over of the crop, the seller shall be released from the sale.

In the opinion of your Contract Committee, where a seller starts out to sell something that he does not own, he is taking a risk, and unless he is willing to make a future delivery, he should not make the sale, as the buyer, in case of an excess crop, must take all he buys without any concession in price.

In the opinion of your Contract Committee, where a future sale is made, the contract would just read somewhat like this:—

".....Seller, sold Buyer, bags of Lima Beans, to be Choice Recleaned stock at per bag."

This is a clean-cut transaction, and the buyer and the seller both know what it means.

We feel sure buyers will not have any trouble in finding bean dealers who will sell on an equitable basis. Purchases so made would seem more fair and reasonable than buying under the present future clause, which reads as follows:—

"Future Sales.—Seller and Buyer agree that as they are buying and selling a crop, the maturity at harvest of which depends entirely upon the weather of California, that in case of destruction by the elements of one-half or over, the crop, that Seller shall be released and this contract null and void; and in case of rain damaging the crop that it shall be the Seller's privilege to furnish rain-damaged beans, but to be re-cleaned, a sample of quality of such rain-damaged beans be furnished for approval, with Buyer's option to accept or reject such beans before shipment, such rejection to constitute delivery."

This does not seem just to the buyer, nor does it afford him the protection to which he is entitled.

Quaker Oats Co. Gets Grand Prize on Cereals.

The Quaker Oats Co. was only one of several manufacturers of cereals and breakfast foods who exhibited at the Panama Exposition in San Francisco, yet it captured the Grand Prize, which means the first and highest honor awarded in the cereal class. Not only did the award cover the merit of Quaker Oats, but it covered some of the machinery used to make it.

A few tomatoes are coming in, but the crop has been hard hit by the inconsistent weather. Good tomatoes command 75 cents.

The Grocery Markets

Tea.

The only change which has occurred in tea during the week is an advance about a cent a pound in low-grade teas. This advance has taken place in England and has not yet strongly affected our markets. The cause appears to be that the recent decline, amounting to about 3 cents per pound, was too great under the conditions. In the English duty has advanced some of the Ceylon tea plantations have been destroyed, and altogether the situation is much firmer. Other grades of tea are unchanged and in fair demand. Prices steady to firm.

Coffee.

Coffee shows no change for the week. Perhaps the feeling is a little firmer in Java and Santos, but certainly there is no advance. The demand is fair under the circumstances, but the undercurrent in these coffees is by no means strong. The situation will probably remain stagnant unless some important change happens in the way of crop reduction or valorization or removal of embargo in Europe. Mild coffees are unchanged and quiet on a low basis. Java and Mocha unchanged and firm.

Sugar.

Sugar continues to attract the attention of the trade, and all refiners are on a basis of 4.90 cents for granulated. Domestic beet granulated is being delivered in the extreme East at 5 cents. Raws are averaging around 4 cents, which still makes a fair margin for the refiner. Sugar has been in light consumptive demand. There is nothing actually in sight to justify a prediction of any substantial change in the near future.

Syrup and Molasses.

Glucose declined another 10 points during the week. Compound syrup has attracted but little attention to these fluctuations of glucose during the last few months. If it had advanced with any one, it would be up about 2 cents a gallon and would now have been at where it was to start with, as the others have about equaled the advance. The demand for compound syrup is dull. Sugar syrup is steady to firm but quiet. Molasses dull at ruling prices.

Fish.

Norway mackerel are scarce and very high although the market is no higher than last week. It seems to be more difficult to buy at old prices, however. The market has transpired in the market for new fall-caught Norways. The ruling prices which, as reported, were extremely high, are being maintained, and it looks as if very little Norway mackerel would come to this country this season. Irish mackerel are not figured; neither are shrimps at the present time. Mackerel is in very light demand. Cod, hake and haddock, on account of the cooler weather, have come into some demand at unchanged prices. Salmon shows no particular change, except pink, which have been cut by practically all sellers. The opening price in a large way was 75 cents a dozen, but it was later cut by various packers to 65 cents. Old salmon shows no particular change. Tuna fish bids fair to be scarce this year and probably higher. Domestic sardines are very dull and unchanged in prices. Imported sardines quiet and unchanged.

Canned Goods.

Tomatoes are firmly maintained on the basis quoted last week. Quite a number of holders have withdrawn from the market and will stay out until prices get to at least 90 cents per dozen for Maryland 3s. That means 5 cents advance. The pack will probably be not over 8,000,000 cases, and there is reason to believe there was at least 2,000,000 carry-over. This would make a total supply of 10,000,000, which is just about the consumption. It would make a firm but not a famine situation. The demand for tomatoes is quite light at present. Corn and peas are both unchanged, corn being steady to firm and peas being heavy. Apples quiet at ruling quotations. California canned goods show no change and practically no business from first hands, as futures are now coming in. The consumptive demand is dull. Small Eastern staple canned goods unchanged and quiet.

Dried Fruits.

The prune market in California is unchanged, but in the East the spot supply is so small that prunes that are on their way forward are being sold at least a cent profit. Of course, this situation will cure itself as shipments increase. Peaches, apricots and currants are all dull and unchanged in price. The California raisin combination has named during the week a price of 7 cents in a large way on new fancy seeded raisins in cartons. This is 1/2 cent above the price at which freshly cleaned old seeded were offered up to September 20th and 1/2 cent above last year's opening price. The combination has named the price of 6 cents for bulk seeded raisins, this being an effort, it is believed, to interest large consumers of raisins, like bakers.

Beans and Peas.

Pea beans are unchanged on last week's basis. Marrows are firm on a basis of 5 cents in a large way to come forward. The demand is very light. California limas are a shade lower to come forward, mainly because the price was too high before. Green and Scotch peas are unchanged, although the situation is firm, because the new crop is

Don't Let Your Tea Trade Go to Peddlers

The taste for tea is acquired—not natural. Once acquired, it stays.

Every live dealer can, by little effort, educate his trade to a particular quality or flavor of tea and, by selling TETLEY'S TEA, he is sure of uniform quality and flavor the year around. This will insure the return of customers again and again for that particular tea, and keep his business steadily progressive.

No premiums, no china, nothing but the finest selection of India and Ceylon tea, carefully blended to a permanently uniform quality and packed in attractive air-tight tins—not coming in as was expected, owing to heavy rains.

Butter.

The butter market is firm at an advance of 1 cent per pound. There is good consumptive demand for grades and receipts are falling off considerably. The quality is running average good for the season, and the entire situation is satisfactorily healthy on the present basis. No further advance any moment seems in sight.

Eggs.

The receipts of fancy new-laid eggs are very light and the market is firm at an advance of 2 cents per dozen. At the advance the market is healthy. All of the late receipts of fresh eggs are absorbed on arrival and the outlook is firm.

Cheese.

The cheese market is firm and unchanged, with a normal consumptive demand. Stocks of cheese are about usual for the season and the average quality is very fancy.

Provisions.

A good demand is reported for cuts of smoked meats. Prices are steady at an advance of 1/4 cent on cuts. Both pure and compound lard also show an advance of 1/2 cent. Cuts are firm, with a good consumptive demand. Dried beef, barreled pork and canned meats are steady and in demand.

INDIVIDUAL MARKET REPORT

Imported Fish Specialties.

Business during the last week shown a decided improvement. Buyers in spite of advancing prices, seem to have more confidence in the situation and are buying more readily and in larger quantities than of late. This better feeling, judging from reports of our agents, seems to prevail in all parts of the United States and it is rather gratifying to see the South seems to have finally awakened from its lethargy and started to do business with confidence. We would therefore call business very satisfactory, if we only had the means of supplying all that our trade wants. Unfortunately, we are short of lots of goods, which we cannot get, owing to the present war conditions.

Herrings of all kinds continue scarce as ever. Practically no shipments are arriving from Holland, because prices there are so extremely high that it is doubtful if any money can be made on importations of Holland herrings at the present moment, because barrels of herrings which ordinarily would sell at $7 to $9 would have to be sold to-day, surely not less than about $22 per barrel, that is for first quality herrings. Some shipments of Scotch herrings are arriving, those that are of fine quality are being ready sale.

Only a few shipments of general large, fat Norway herrings have arrived. They show excellent quality in fact, better than we have seen them many years past, but the price is a great deal higher than we have seen it for a great many years. There is certainly need not be any fear of our market being overstocked with herring as Germany is taking practically all that can get hold of at fancy prices. In fact, much higher figures than we are possibly afford to pay.

The sardine situation is unchanged only the holders of the small stock are beginning to realize their folly throwing away their goods at cost below cost, and are holding firmly somewhat higher prices, although the higher prices now asked for goods are not at all in harmony with to-days cost of the goods in the European market. The catch in Portland is only very moderate, and no shipments can be expected from there for the present. In Norway the catch has been rather poor during the few weeks, but we are rather hopeful of the situation, as the season is still very young, and basing our judgment on past performances, we look forward to some good fishing. Stocks here are really very much depleted, and we need goods very badly, we shall simply have to pay the dealers what they can sell the goods to European markets or go without them. Our only salvation is a good catch of fish in the near future, and all will be well.

We do not seem to be able to get information in regard to the Norwegian mackerel catch. It is getting very late and we are getting impatient, but our agents in answering our inquiries simply answer that we will have to wait, sit still and be patient and await developments. In the meantime, the stock of last season's Norway mackerel is gradually clearing here and prices are stiffening.

Shipments of Norwegian stockfish, round and split, have arrived, and of very fine quality, but at the same time they show prices which have been unheard of for some years past.

We anticipate that the demand, on account of the enormously high prices, will be rather curtailed, but nevertheless the trade seems to take the goods at these prices.

Standard Canned Goods.

Relief came this week from the extremely hot weather that prevailed during the early part of the month. The temperature fell from 95 degrees to below 50 degrees almost overnight. Reserves of raw tomatoes at the wholesale market fell off almost to the disappearing point, so far as the canners were concerned. Never before have so many canneries closed down in the month of September, many of them running, say, three to four weeks less this season than in ordinary times. The reduced yield per bushel of filled tomatoes has added much to the cost of canning because of the irregular ripening of the fruit, outside the big advance in the price of the material. The developments in the conditions during the next two weeks will be of great interest to the buyers and jobbers and probably will govern the course of the market prices of tomatoes during the fall and winter months.

This was a busy week in the tomato market here and in all other canning centers, and the outlook is for further activity in the coming week. The buying orders increased in size as well as in number, and they came from the same widely scattered markets that have been buying steadily in car lots during the summer. It is not easy to find sellers of tomatoes in large blocks even at higher prices than the daily quotations for single carloads, which is a very unusual situation in that staple article. Nearly every broker has a list of offers for tomatoes so close to the present quotations that a large percentage of them may become buying orders at any time and cause a further advance in prices without much notice. Each buyer is of course the better judge whether to buy now or await further developments, but all the same, he should be within striking distance if it becomes advisable to buy quickly.

The activity in the tomato market during the week dwarfed the doings in the other lines of vegetables. There was no increase in the size of the orders, but there was an increase in the number of them, and they covered possibly a larger assortment of goods. The bulk of the orders were for corn, the different grades of string beans, from the cheapest to the highest priced goods, wax beans, sweet potatoes and the cheap grades of peas. There were no price-changes of special interest during the week.

There was an increase in the buying of pie peaches, and the prices show an inclination to advance. Seconds peaches were only fairly active in small lots and the higher grades were dull. The buying of pears and apples was light this week, but the prices continue firm. Small fruits, berries, cherries, as well as pineapples, were almost at a standstill, with no changes in the prices. The packers expect an active market for fruits during the fall months, before freezing weather sets in.

After the dull summer season, it is expected that the fall season for oysters will become active, especially if there is early freezing weather. The prices are so low now that it may be well to look after them.

Rice.

Demand for the week has been very satisfactory, both from a local and nearby standpoint. Arriving parcels have found a ready sale, and as the reports from the South are of a sustaining character, prices continue steady to strong. Blue Rose is finding a ready market at high figures, and as receipts of rough are not expected in quantities before another ten days, prices are expected to hold steady. New crop Japans are now being shown and arrivals in this market are expected shortly. Receipts of Honduras continue moderate, but might be enlarged to good purpose, as spot stocks for immediate delivery are scanty.

Advices from the South along the Atlantic coast report active trading in about the same volume as last week, and with the steady advance in cotton, improving conditions are looked for. The first new crop Carolina was received a few days ago, but up to the present the clean rice has not appeared on the market.

At New Orleans the market is very strong, with prices up a full $\frac{1}{4}$ cent over last week and a premium is being paid for new crop Blue Rose and Japans. The river rough now arriving shows a decided deterioration in color, in consequence, strictly fancy heads are very scarce and in big demand.

In the Interior, Southwest Louisiana, Texas and Arkansas, the market is strong at current prices, which shows an advance over those ruling in some sections two weeks ago. There have been some sizable lots of Texas rough which were picked up promptly by the mills who were anxious to get their machinery in motion on new goods. The general movement, however, is slow, as the crop is late, and as yet there is very little accumulation of rough.

Evaporated Apples, Etc.

The evaporated apple situation continues quiet here, with very little trading being done.

The evaporators are slow in opening up, owing to the fact that the demand is so light.

Prime quality in 50-pound boxes are quotable at $6\frac{1}{2}$ cents to $6\frac{3}{4}$ cents per pound in carload lots, choice $\frac{1}{2}$ cent per pound higher. Sellers want a premium for small quantities. It is difficult to tell whether prices will be above or below this. There is practically no demand whatever from Europe, and this may discourage drying. It has been the hardest season to size up conditions that we have had in a good many years.

The raspberry market is quiet. The market is quotable at from 21 to $21\frac{1}{2}$ cents per pound, f. o. b. in barrels.

Spices.

The market is quite active, with a much firmer tone, and with upward tendency in many grades. Foreign markets continue generally steady and stocks here are unusually short.

Black Peppers.—Are some little higher in all markets, with good demand. Foreign markets are steady and indications really point to higher values.

Red Peppers.—There is a very steady demand for all grades. Prices are strongly maintained.

Cloves.—Quite steady, with a better trade demand.

Pimento (Allspice).—Firm and in fair demand. Present prices we consider safe.

Mace.—Very scarce at present and the demand has increased very much. Prices steady and firm.

Nutmegs.—While the demand continues good, prices are generally unchanged.

Cassias.—Saigon scarce and dull. China grades, rolls and broken, both firmer and higher. Ceylon cinnamon has also advanced.

Gingers.—Unsettled. Prices continuing upward. Demand is much better.

Green Ginger Root.—Selling now in a satisfactory way. Supplies up to the demand.

Tapiocas.—Very steady and in good demand. Prices firm.

Paprika.—In fair demand at generally unchanged prices. Hungarian grade out of stock.

Seeds, Herbs, Etc.—Mustard in good demand at rapidly advancing prices. Coriander some little firmer. Thyme and German marjoram have advanced. Cummin seed is in active demand and likely to be much higher.

MARKET NOTES.

Heavy European demand for raisins of all kinds and the heavy demand for Muscatel raisins, due to the educational campaign now being carried on by the California Associated Raisin Co., has so decreased the raisin supply upon the Pacific coast that it has necessitated the withdrawal of 1914 prices. This means that no shipments of Muscatel will be made from the coast until the 1915 crop is ready for shipment, and orders are now only taken subject prior sale. Picking reports show shrinkage of possibly 10,000 tons from first estimate. This means an increase of only about 10 per cent. over last year's crop, while an increase of from 20 to 25 per cent. was expected.

The cranberry crop in Jersey looks poor, on account of early frost. The Cape Cod outlook is normal. Cape Cod berries are averaging $6.50 per barrel and Jerseys $1.50 to $1.75.

New York State grapes are just beginning to come in. Twenty-pound baskets of wine grapes rule at 45 cents and four-pound baskets of Concord at 40 cents.

The first Almeria grapes are due in New York this week. The crop will be about two-thirds of last year, but if the growers have to ship all the stock to the United States, prices will be lower.

This has been a poor year for catapoules. Very few have been grown even the Rocky Fords. The latter are still coming in at $2 to $2.50, but large proportion are poor.

Apples are ruling about on the same basis as a year ago—$4.50 for the finest fancy apples to $1. Two dollars to $3 covers nearly everything.

Please find inclosed money order to pay for "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" for two years. You can't keep store without it. You collected enough bad accounts from me to pay for several years' subscription.—F. A. Crabtree, Centerville, Va.

Fresh Sausage, Scrapple, Souse, Liver Pudding

Burk's Fresh Sausage

Composed entirely of selected tender pieces of pork, not the ordinary trimmings commonly used. Not cheapened in price and quality by the addition of tripe, boiled rice and sundry substitutes. Correctly seasoned, not offensive to sensitive stomachs because of pungent herbs. Nutritious. In four styles—hashed fine and coarse, linked and in straight casings.

Burk's Philadelphia Scrapple

Prepared from the very best materials—good, wholesome meats and extra fine corn meal. Well boiled and seasoned to suit the most critical. Not to be compared with some cheap products of doubtful hues and colors. Burk's eats as good as it looks. Superior to farmers' products. In pans of 15 pounds each.

Burk's Pig Souse

is a seasonable specialty prepared fresh daily, in pans of five pounds each. The jelly is clear and transparent and free from vegetable gelatines and ill-smelling glue stock. Contains plenty of meat and garnished with slices of lemon and parsley.

Proves attractive when turned out of the pan, and is a quick seller, saving the consumer the trouble of cooking pig's feet, so difficult to obtain at this season of the year.

Burk's Liver Pudding

Of the usual "Burk" standard—clean and unadulterated. Rich in quality and an excellent dish when fried, or, after removing the casing, hashed with potatoes. In rings of 1 pound each.

Here's a New One on Wives.

You fellows will remember that from time to time I've rose up in meeting and had something to say about wives. Good wives and bad wives, specially business men's wives. Wives that are worth their weight in diamonds, and wives that ought to be choked to death.

I heard a new one about 'em the other night.

I got landed in a certain town one night last week and had to stay over until the next day. There was a bunch of us road men at the hotel and after we'd got our mail out we hit it up in the smoking room and swapped tales. I didn't have as good a time as I might, because the other boys insisted on talking part of the time, and I didn't see any reason why they should. One good talker in a bunch like that is enough.

Several of the fellows called on the same trade, and they knew each other's customers. The talk turned on their wives and how one wife helped and the other hurt and so on.

We all agreed that in a case where the wife was first class, and really got into the business right, she was pretty apt to be the chief brains of the shebang.

Much obliged for the applause, ladies. You can kiss me if you'll promise not to muss my hair.

"Well, I had a funny one handed to me to-day," one of the boys said. "I've got a customer down here in ——— who is behind in his bills. He owes our house over $400 and it's nearly a month overdue. Our credit man told me to cut him down on this trip and to get some money out of him without fail. I knew it was up to me—the credit man has the temper of the devil—and I put up a pretty stiff argument. He said he couldn't give me more than $50, which wasn't enough. I kept at him and after a while he took me back to his office and told me he was going to tell me why he was short.

"I'm going to open up to you," he said, "and let you see the hole I'm in. I owe over $100 to the department store here for my wife's bills, and she told me last week she was going to spend $150 more on clothes she had to have this fall, and she had to have the money right now. She comes of rich people and she's always had plenty of money. She goes out a good deal and she has to dress up to it. I owe some other wholesale bills and I have to give them some, and altogether it's keeping me strapped."

"Well," said the salesman, "I don't see any reason why we should dress your wife, do you?" (Some raw, eh?) "She can't make you give her money, if you haven't got it, can she?"

"She can come pretty close to it."

"How can she? What do you mean by that?"

"She can raise hell, that's what she can do. Are you married?"

"Sure I am," said the salesman, "but I don't have anything like that going on, you can bet your life. What would she do?"

"Why she cries all day and all night," he said. "She goes home and tells her folks that I don't give her enough to cover her body. She cries at night so the neighbors can hear her. She knows how I hate anything like that, and she just plays on it. I always did need my sleep, and if I can't get it I'm no good for business or anything else. She knows that, and she works on that too. Oh, I tell you its hell on earth! Nobody can be nicer than she can when she gets what she wants."

We all sat still and listened for him to tell what he did in the end.

"How'd you chaps like to have a woman like that?" he said.

"But what did you do?" I said.

"I took his $50 and refused to sell him anything. Told him if he didn't have a check for half the account in the office by the time I got back I was coming down there the next day and start suit against him."

What d'ye know about that? You may not believe it, but I've always sort of wished I could have a wife like that for a little while, so's I could try my cure on her. I've got a cure for that color meanness and I've never had a chance to try it. Trouble is, my wife's plumb afraid of me and my slightest word is law around our house.

My cure would be just the thing for that female. It would cure her or kill her, and I wouldn't care a ding which. If it couldn't cure her I'd want it to kill her.

The first thing I'd do, when s started to cry for money in t night, is to get a rubber band abo a foot long and half an inch thi I'd put all the windows down nobody could butt in, and then turn the covers down, stretch o the rubber band as far as I cou pull it and let her have it till arm got sore.

Say a thousand times.

If she still cried for mon though I've got a hunch s wouldn't, I'd pour her mouth f of vinegar and tie a band over so's she couldn't spill it.

If she still cried for mon though I'm most sure now s wouldn't, I'd tickle the soles of feet till she dropped dead. Th ain't any misery on earth like th I had it done to me once whe was a kid and mother thinks th what ails me now.

If all this fell down, I'd st every dud she had and drive out of the house with a pair of pants and a derby hat on.

Now take it from me, broth and friends, when that cure v over there'd be no more crying the night for money. She'd t

Possible Cases Under New Pennsylvania Workmen's Compensation Act

Becomes Operative Next January 1st, and Makes all Retail Merchants Within the State Liable for Accidents to Their Employees While Latter are at Work.

[Inasmuch as the new Pennsylvania Workmen's Compensation Law, which becomes operative next January 1st, affects every grocer and general storekeeper within the State, the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" will publish from time to time some possible cases which may arise under it, in the experience of the average grocer or general storekeeper. A full digest of the act was published in the issue of July 26th last. Readers hereof will remember that it practically makes it compulsory for employers to pay damages to employees who meet with accidents in the course of their regular work.—Ed.]

Possible Case No. 2.

Messrs. Jones & Smith do a retail business, delivering their goods, $18 per week; he was married had two children.

In this case, there being a wife and two children, Jones & Smith would have to pay to the widow per cent. of Brown's wages, or per week, for 300 weeks. The accident will cost them $2,700, provided they are not insured, as, however, they will probably have to for the act requires insurance to be carried in such a case as this. Before the act passed, Jones & Smith would not have had to pay Brown anything, for it was his own negligence absolutely that caused his death.

331.—The Latest Chapter in Price-Fixing Litigation May Have a Far-Reaching Effect.

Another most interesting chapter has been added to the already copious legal literature on price-fixing, particularly as to the right of the manufacturer to tell the trade what they shall sell, his product for. It comes through the case of the American Graphophone Co. vs. the Boston Store of Chicago, a cut-price department store, which has just been decided. One of the counsel in the case has been kind enough to send me a copy of the decision, and I feel like discussing it briefly, for I want the readers of these articles to be up to date on this most important question.

The point of the case was whether a manufacturer, selling a patented article to a retailer direct, could legally contract with that retailer, before he sold him, to resell only at a fixed price, and, if the retailer broke the agreement, could the manufacturer enforce it by getting an injunction (the only really effective way) or must he sue for damages, or was the contract wholly unenforceable because in restraint of competition?

The American Graphophone Co. makes patented talking machines, or controls the patents on them, I don't know which and it matters not which. This company sold its graphophones to the Boston Store, a typical cut-price department store, but before it did so it made the Boston Store agree to resell only at certain prices which the American Company had fixed. The Boston Store signed the written agreement, got the goods, and then cut the life out of them. Application for injunction was promptly filed by the American Graphophone Co., on the legal theory that the American Company has a legal patented monopoly of its talking machines, and therefore had a right to sell dealers on its own terms. Where a dealer agreed to those terms and got the goods on the strength of its agreement, it could not fairly be allowed to break its agreement and disorganize the manufacturer's business.

The Boston Store defended on the ground laid down (on different facts) in some of the United States Supreme Court decisions, viz., that the American Graphophone Co. when it sold its machines, parted with title to them, and with title went all power to control the price. Therefore the price-fixing agreement was illegal, and the Boston Store could make such an agreement, get merchandise on the strength of having made it, and then do as it liked.

If this doctrine should be upheld, the manufacturer would be at the absolute mercy of every cutter. The only thing he could do would be to refuse to sell at all.

But the United States Court for the Northern Illinois District did not uphold this doctrine. In fact it scotched it forever unless it is reversed on appeal. The court in this case decided that a manufacturer owning a patented (and by the same token a trade-marked or a copyrighted) article, can tie up the jobber or the retailer to whom he sells, to resell it at a fixed price, and if the dealer violates the agreement, he can be stopped by injunction. The price-fixing agreement, however, cannot be made by any notice, pasted on the package. It must be done by regular contract, signed and agreed to by both parties.

The court's final conclusion, which really contains the gist of the decision is

That an agent or vendee of a patentee (that is, any one who buys patented merchandise from the owner of the patent), may by direct covenant or agreement, be bound to the observance of price restriction, imposed as a condition on which exclusive right of sale by the patentee is being exercised.

At first glance this seems in conflict with certain well known decisions of the United States Supreme Court, but the Illinois United States Court shows clearly that it is not. The United States Supreme Court decided in several recent cases, the most notable of which was Bauer vs. O'Donnell (the Sanatogen case), that owning a patent or trade-mark or copyright did not alone give the right to fix the resale price, and it said further that the resale price could not be controlled merely by the printing of a notice on the package. The notice scheme was a favorite with manufacturers until the Supreme Court said it was worthless. There was nothing in any of the decisions referred to which even impliedly denied a manufacturer's right to tie up a buyer to resale at a certain figure, provided it was done properly. The court in the graphophone case says it is done properly and legally when the seller and the buyer make a formal contract to that effect, and further says that such a contract is legal and will be enforced.

The effect of this decision on the sale of articles which are not patented, though protected by trademarking the brand or by copyrighting, is exceedingly interesting. The court's theory is that the owner of a patented article has been given a monopoly, and he can sell all or part of it. If he sells a restricted right of sale under it, the restriction may be an agreement to resell at a certain price.

Now this, it seems to me, leaves any article to which the seller has a legal monopoly whether a ated monopoly or not. It lets in Kellogg's Toasted Corn Flakes, because the manufacturer has an absolute monopoly in Kellogg's Toasted Corn Flakes. It lets in any trade-marked or proprietary article, because the seller of it has an absolute monopoly in it, just as the New York Court recently said the Cream Wheat Co. had in Cream of Wheat—not in the article so much as in the brand. Therefore, if the seller of a patented article can legally bind his buyer to resell at a fixed price, as this United States Court says he can, I am unable to escape the conclusion that any seller who, for any reason, has a proper monopoly in his product, can do likewise.

Question: J. F. E.—I wish to inquire whether under the law regulating the employment of women there is any provision or dispensation granted where the manager or head lady having charge of a department may return to her shop after close of business day? Supposing it to be head trimmer in millinery department who may wish to do some extra work.

Answer.—If the woman in question is an employee, she cannot be permitted to work more than the statutory number of hours. It makes no difference what position she holds if she is an employee. Of course if she was a partner in the business it would be different.

NOTE.—Requests for information in this department should tersely set out full all the facts bearing on the case, and all questions should be carefully framed to avoid misconstruction. Write on one side of the sheet only. Letters should be received at this office not later than Tuesday of each week, to ensure an answer in the Monday's issue following. The signature and address of the writer must accompany all inquiries, and will be published unless there is a request not to do so. All inquiries received will be answered without charge. Address all communications to Legal Editor "Modern Merchant and Grocery World."

Used in Dozens of Dishes

Borden's Peerless Brand Evaporated Milk Has a Big Sale for Cooking Purposes

BORDEN'S EVAPORATED MILK is not only used for tea, coffee and cereals at the table, but many delicious dishes can be made from it. It is better than raw milk for many dishes, because it is so rich and creamy. Encourage your customers to bake cakes, cookies, doughnuts, to make soups, pies and croquettes with BORDEN'S EVAPORATED MILK. They will be pleased with its flavor and quality and will become steady purchasers, thus increasing your sales. All your customers buy milk and YOU ought to sell it to them; you can if you try. BORDEN'S EVAPORATED MILK is made by the most modern process—only the water is taken out of the milk and absolutely nothing is put into it. Our constant advertising and established reputation makes BORDEN'S EVAPORATED MILK easy to sell.

WHAT TO TELL CUSTOMERS

"You can always depend on BORDEN'S EVAPORATED MILK because it is made from the richest cow's milk by a sanitary process that preserves all its food value and creamy richness. Try it this week."

This is one of the firms the sale of whose products helps organize the Pennsylvania Retail Merchants

Danielsville, Pa., Sept. 20, 1915.
Editor "Science of Advertising."

Dear Sir:—Inclosed you will please find circular that we are using this week. Kindly tell us just what you think of it, and oblige,
Yours truly,
MARSH & HERMAN.

thing on it was probably seen. Still, it doesn't do to lose any tricks in the advertising game. It is uncertain enough even when you think every possible condition is right. I suggest that a heading something like

The text of this circular is all right. Good, breezy stuff, persuasively phrased—it ought to get business. I would make one suggestion—to even up the explanatory matter in these various paragraphs a little better. Under Dolly Varden flour there are several lines, while under starch there is practically nothing. Other paragraphs have only a line. Of course there is more to be said about some things than about others, I realize that. Still more could be said. Take coal oil. I should have given the regular price and said something about this being high grade oil of such and such degree. Under mackerel I would have given the size and the variety—Norway, Irish or shore. Under jar tops I would have said something about their being made of fresh new rubber, and so on.

The man who writes this advertisement is able to write pretty forceful stuff. He ought to keep it up, paying attention to cutting out unnecessary words and also to grammar.

Pennsylvania Organization Notes.

Organizer Smedley is planning to visit every local organization in the State. Our suggestion is to send him a prompt invitation to visit yours. His services are given without one cent of expense to you.

Associations should jump at the chance of securing his services; he is a man of experience in organization; a fluent and interesting speaker and knows how to revive the lagging interest of the members. A letter addressed to William Smedley, 802 Chestnut street, Philadelphia, will be promptly answered. His service is offered not only to organized towns but to the towns who need organizing. So, Merchant, if you feel the need of association in your town, write Smedley.

Every town should have an organization of its business men. An association of the right sort means a better town, a better town means better business, better business means better profits.

Live wire business men are realizing that their real competitor is the man next door, but the large towns who are attracting trade from them. One of the fundamentals of good organization is how to preserve the small town and to make it grow. Organize.

If the bad paying customer bothers you, if credit is too cheap in your town, if merchants do not pull together, evils exist, the remedy is organization.

The modern business man competes along sane lines but he also knows that co-operation is better than competition. He believes in making his town attractive; this he can not do alone. Unitedly this can be accomplished. A small town will lose out unless business men work together. Mr. Bretson, of the "Dry Goods Man," St. Louis, states "that in the period from 1900 to 1910, 788 towns lost population in the State of Illinois, 63 in Indiana, 564 in Iowa, 677 in Michigan, 540 in Missouri, 1,136 in Ohio, 1,520 in Pennsylvania. If towns lose population they certainly lose business, they lose prestige and are going backward." Is it not time that the small town business man aroused himself "knowing the truth" and providing the remedy?

The evils of most towns are the catalogue houses, transient merchants, out-of-town buying, the credit evil, more highly developed methods of quick transportation. Inside the town is the narrow, selfish, business man seems to forget that his success depends upon the success of his neighbors. Organization is the first step in changed conditions. Organize.

Real towns are not made by business men who have no vision beyond their own store doors, but by those who look more beyond and who have the inclination to pull with their neighbors. Organize.

A real business association of business men is a business proposition. To get business out of these associations you must put business in them.

Organization is business. Organize.

If organizations accomplished more than teaching men to look each other better, it is worth the costs.

Mr. Business Man, it's up to you. Stop kicking about conditions. Organize and change them.

The circular was printed in black on excellent quality white paper and measured 12½ x 18½ inches. Above is the much reduced reproduction.

I don't like this heading. It could have been made much more attractive looking. Perhaps this didn't affect results, because the circular is so large and bold that any-this would have attracted more attention:—

Four Days of Great Bargains

This is a special push we're making from Wednesday morning, September 22d, till Saturday, September 25th, in order to boom business. You'll agree you never saw such values and probably never will again.

Have You Made Your Lipton's Tea Display Yet?

The time is ripe, people are home, tea is being bought. Not only can you sell some tea through a Lipton Tea display now, but you may win a big slice of the $175 prize money that is to be given away as prizes in our Display Contest on November 1st.

The contest is for the five best window displays of Lipton's Tea. The "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" will give to the five retail dealers who make the most attractive window displays of Lipton's Tea before the end of this contest, the following cash prizes:—

For the Best	-	-	-	-	$75
For the Second	-	-	-	-	$50
For the Third	-	-	-	-	$25
For the Fourth	-	-	-	-	$15
For the Fifth	-	-	-	-	$10

CONDITIONS:

1. The display entered in the contest must be of Lipton's Tea alone.
2. The display must remain in the window one week.
3. Each contestant must send to this office a photograph of his display or a careful detailed description of it. Naturally a picture would be better, though a contestant need not incur that expense if he does not wish to. Almost every family now has a kodak-user in it who could photograph a window display.
4. Each contestant if he decides to enter the contest, will kindly drop this office a postal card to that effect.
5. The contest closes November 1, 1915.

The Subscribers' Bargain List

Have you got any goods you don't want? Anything—canned goods, groceries, hardware, dry goods, anything at all that's in good condition, but won't sell for you.

If you will make a price on it we can probably sell it for you in a hurry. Write us about it, stating the quantity, condition and your best price. You might give the original cost, too. We will give it a key number and offer it to our 4,000 subscribers. Your name will not appear unless you want it to. All sales ought to be on a cash basis.

The point is that what won't sell for you may be in everyday demand for somebody else, who will be glad to get your stock of it at a bargain.

There will be no charge for this service anywhere—we do it to help along.

THE VALUE OF BRIGHT STORES

The difficulty of making a sale—whether it be dry goods or vegetables, jewelry or shoes is increased tenfold in a poorly lighted store. Other things being equal, the Electrically lighted shop will do more business than the store which uses other illuminants. "Indoor Daylight" can only be obtained by the use of Mazda Electric lamps.

Where the Glass Jar Comes In

The glass jar in which Croft's Swiss Milk Cocoa—and that only—is packed offers the entering wedge to a sale, because it is unusual.

No woman ever saw cocoa packed in glass before; the sight is novel; she asks about it, and if you help a little, she buys.

Bought once, Croft's Swiss Milk Cocoa will always be bought again, for it has a flavor which has never been successfully imitated. Our exclusive making process removes the bad, develops the good, and the result is the smoothest, most delicious drinking cocoa on the market

Wants to Close All the Stores in His Town But One

Discussing Whether There Are Too Many Stores in Business, a General Storekeeper Who is One of Seven in a Small Town Shows How Everybody Would be Benefited by Consolidating Them.

The retail grocers of Canada, like those of the United States, are discussing the question whether the main evils of the business at present are not the result of too many stores. A well known Newfoundland merchant doing business in a small town, in which there are seven stores, makes a statement in which he advocates closing them all but one. Some interesting extracts from his argument follow:—

From my way of looking at difficulties like this, I consider David Lloyd George's remark regarding the liquor question in England in the early part of the war that "drink is a greater enemy to this country than Germany," applies equally to us as retailers; only it's not drink—it's ourselves. We are our own greatest enemies and we use up far more gray matter trying to beat our next door competitor than we do in fighting the mail order houses or trying to apply remedies to stop the club orders, going to the city stores.

Take our own town here as an example. We have seven stores, and three of us have a delivery team each. Now my contention is this: Close up all those stores but one—if the town is small like ours and, say, two if larger—each party taking stock equal to his present holdings. We would then be able to carry everything from a tooth pick to a flying machine, which we cannot do at present.

To further illustrate my meaning: If one wants to purchase flour at any kind of price he has to buy it in carload lots of 200 barrels. For myself I have according to the season of the year anywhere from $1,200 to $2,500 tied up in flour, and supposing my competitors have the same, what a lot of unnecessary capital is being tied up in this one article.

Boots and shoes, like flour, is another heavy article. One must have the variety and keep sizes up or he will lose sales. Supposing I have, say, $2,000 worth of boots and shoes in stock. A woman comes in for a pair of shoes and she wants, say, a 4½ in a certain kind on display. Well, you haven't a 4½ in that particular kind, but you have in other kinds. But she wants this particular shoe and will take no other. You consequently lose a sale.

Now, what I contend is that if we close all the stores but one we could carry much less stocks of certain kinds and yet carry a much larger variety and still have less capital tied up.

It would also cut out competition, reduce our selling expenses and at least cut out one horse and driver—considerable saving alone. It would be, too, in my way of thinking, the ideal way to solve the high selling costs. Leaving out of consideration all the worry attached to watching drafts and overdue bills, you would have all the people coming to the one store, all getting treated alike and if, like ourselves and some of our competitors giving fortnightly credits, there would be an absolute stop to running accounts at every store and paying me a few dollars, some one else a few more every fortnight, etc. Every once in a while, too, some one of us is getting stuck. Again we would also save hundreds of dollars on freight charges. Now each and all of us have a few packages of many different articles coming along every week or oftener. By my way of figuring with the one store principal, we could have all our freight in carload lots, saving more than half the freight charges. And what would be easier than doing the same as the mail order houses do—pay your cash and get the goods.

Government's Suit Against American Can Co. to be Disposed of Soon.

The United States Government suit against the American Can Co. will be heard before the United States District Court at Baltimore very shortly. Attorney-General Gregory contends that three can companies control the trade in tin cans of every description. The Government also claims that the American Can Company, after taking in over 100 independent plants, dismantled and shut them down within a period of two years.

Wildey Says Mail Order Houses Make Their Cut Prices Out of Buying, Not Out of Selling Outlines a Campaign Which He Thinks Would Prevent the Mail Order Concerns From Underbuying the Regular Trade.

A few weeks ago I made the statement that the catalogue house doesn't make its cut price out of its selling, but out of its buying, and I want you to take that thought home to you. I don't ask any manufacturer to stop selling to catalogue houses. I ask but one thing of them, and that is that they treat all of us alike. If the manufacturer wants to give the catalogue house 99½ per cent. off list, that suits me all right, provided he will give me the same per cent. off the same list. The Ingersoll watch has occupied the place it does because the manufacturer has made a good article and advertised it. No one of these three elements—manufacturing, advertising and distribution—is independent of the other, and the fact that the retail dealers have contributed to so large a degree to the success of an article entitles them to a square deal.

The sales manager of one of the largest cereal concerns in the United States wrote to me that they had not been fortunate enough to secure a Sears contract for one of their products, although they had quoted them a price that they would not quote to me. They were quoting them a price that would help them put me out of business, and then asked me to push their products.

The United States is conducting an investigation into the question of price-making, and I had a talk with Mr. Levinge, and I told him that certain goods on my shelves were quoted at a cut price, and that that price stood just as long as they were quoted at that by the mail-order houses, or until lack of profit had driven them from the shelves of my competitors, and then they would go out of my store. I made no apologies for my position then, and I make none now. You can call it price-cutting if you want to, or if you have some other endearing term to apply to it, don't hesitate on my account. The only way I know of to meet the mail-order house price is to meet it, and if two or three thousand retail dealers started out to meet it to-morrow morning, there would be an upheaval in thirty days.

The minute some two or three hundred thousand retailers begin to distribute some forty or fifty nationally advertised articles at the nationally advertised price of cost or less, they are going to bring a pressure to bear upon the manufacturers that will do away with price discrimination.

If you were to meet the mail order house price, your lack of profit would demand a price as favorable as theirs, and until you do that, I don't believe that any force on earth can induce them to stop the abuse. The trade people have tried it. Association officials have thrown up their hands in despair at the same proposition. I have yet to meet a speaker who has been able to accomplish anything and yet within twelve months the retail dealer could drive them off the earth.

It would be a drastic remedy but when the manufacturer tells you that he is protecting you, you tell him that you are protecting him when you maintain the price in face of his double crossing, and that you are entitled to as good a price as there is going. If the mail-order house is entitled to a profit of a hundred per cent., then surely the retail dealer is entitled to a profit for distribution of ninety per cent.

I want to take up the point of getting and studying the catalogues. If you are called to counter their arguments, you must know what arguments they are using, if you make it a point to get the catalogues, you will find they are talking about you and your price. Follow it up by asking their price. If you are paying 20 cents for an article that the catalogue house is selling at 18 cents, find out from somebody what is the margin. Your customers don't hesitate to keep you on needles and pins when your price is above that of the catalogue houses. Why should you be so considerate of the jobber's manufacturer?

There are many little things that go to make up price that the customer does not at once grasp. It may be a 12-ounce package and the price may be made in Chicago, Sioux Falls, or Southern Louisiana, and there will be delays in receiving goods. I have had customers tell me that they had waited weeks for their goods. The goods may be shipped "kn"

COFFEE WEEK

OCT 18-23 1915

NATIONAL COFFEE ROASTERS ASSOCIATION ENLIGHTENMENT

Good Coffee — a — morning necessity

THIS great annual campaign for enlightening the public on the true facts and merits of coffee was inaugurated just a year ago, with results whose momentum has carried right straight through the year.

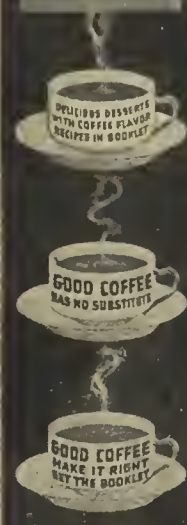

For this year's Week, October 18 to 23, the window displays, store pennants, slogan cards, poster stamps, and above all the coffee book for free distribution by the grocer to his customers, have even greater attractiveness and educational and selling value than before.

Your coffee wholesaler or roaster will furnish you with all the display material and do everything to help you trim your store to best advantage, to get your coffee stock in best possible shape, and to advise you how to make the most of your coffee week opportunity in every way and for permanent results.

This design represents only the window trim, and of course the striking color scheme cannot be shown here, but must be imagined.

Your hearty co-operation in this movement is urged upon you, with every assurance of invaluable results by the down" and require considerable time to put them together. You should study these points and let your customers know and understand them. You will find, too, by a close study of the catalogues that there are many inconsistencies in them. You will find a shoe quoted at $3, with a usual retail value of $4. You will find them quoting an article at $2.50, and stating that the "usual retail value is $4.50," and claiming a saving of $2. Just how this is to be effected you will find by figuring it out for yourself, and should explain that to your customers. By buying mail-order house goods you will get a line on some things that are not down in the catalogue. You will be able to go before your customers with a definite statement and not have to draw on your imagination. The best way to compete with mail-order house merchandise is to know all about the merchandise.

On the 12th of February a year ago it was my privilege to address the Merchants' Short Course at the University of Minnesota. I secured from one of the catalogue houses a house dress which they advertised was of a "usual retail value of $1.60. Our price 80 cents." Through the "Dry Goods Reporter" of Chicago I had been able to match the dresses at $7 a dozen. I had also secured a petticoat, which I tried to match. I found that most of the department stores had never heard of the kind of material. They advertised it as a "usual $2 value. Our price $1." I had considerable difficulty in matching this up at all at any price, as the style was quite late, in fact about two years late. I found that when it had been in style it had sold at $8.50 a dozen. These garments and the house dress, together with the statement in the catalogue, were sent to the post office department, with a request for a fraud order. Since that time in all the literature I have seen sent out by that house, and I think I have seen it all, I have seen but one small article with "the usual retail price, and our price."

In a recent issue of one of the mail-order house catalogues, a shoe was advertised worth $4.50. "Our price $2.90." I invested $2.90 in that shoe, and I invested a little more than that later, and I have had two letters from that house offering to return the investment.

I had one of those shoes taken to pieces and I sent the pieces to the post office department and requested that a fraud order be issued. The mail order house was able to convince them that there had been a mistake.

I take this position and am working along this line, that when a catalogue house advertises a piece of goods as a usual retail value of $1, and their price 52 cents, if you send in and get a 52-cent value, that house has been guilty of defrauding you, and I haven't done anything but what every one of you could have done. You should write to the Senators and Representatives from your districts regarding the matter, and insist that such tricks should be considered as fraudulent. I consider that selling you mining stock at "52 cents worth $1," is no worse. If one is fraudulent, so is the other. The difference is only in degree.

Health Department Finds Dyed Cod Selling as Salmon. Mammoth Meeting of Retailers Within Fifty Mile Radius to be Called to Push Various Trade Movements. Big Plans to Exploit California Lemons. Market Summary.

Special Correspondence of "Modern Merchant and Grocery World."

New York, October 8, 1915.

The announcement by the Health Department during the week that it had found 300 pounds of codfish in a warehouse which had been dyed red and was packed as Alaska salmon, recalls the interesting times of Dr. H. W. Wiley in Washington as Chief Government Chemist, particularly the incident in which he claimed to have found artificial lamb chops on sale in that city. The Health Department claims that the manipulators of the codfish had taken a common grade and had injected red dye causing it to present the appearance of salmon when not examined carefully. All of it was seized and condemned.

The Health Department announced at the same time that it had discovered that certain concerns were using a new food preservative as a substitute for benzoate of soda. The war pushed the price of benzoate so high that it became necessary to find something else, and according to the Health Department the something else is a combination of borax and boric acid. The use of this will be stopped, as there is no law which gives authority to use it. Benzoate of soda before the war was 35 cents a pound, but to-day it is $3.50.

The retail and wholesale grocery house of Park & Tilford, with about eleven stores in New York City and one in Long Branch, will celebrate its seventy-fifth anniversary in business next Tuesday, October 12th.

The National Poultry Bureau and Egg Association held its annual convention at the Hotel McAlpin in this city on Tuesday and Wednesday. There were members present from all over the country. Chicago and Philadelphia had the largest delegations. The by-laws were amended to admit shippers and dealers of cheese as members. They have not been eligible heretofore. A resolution was adopted calling on the Government to issue monthly statements as to the amount of produce in warehouses together with conditions in the industry so that buying as well as selling could be done more intelligently.

W. H. Whitcomb, of Chicago, was elected president; F. Durham, of New York, first vice-president; J. J. Naive, Nashville, Tenn., second vice-president; R. R. Lehman, Philadelphia, Pa., third vice-president; P. F. Combiths, Chicago, secretary; and F. A. Kelly, Chicago, treasurer.

The conference of retail merchants of the Metropolitan district was duly held at the Hotel Astor on Friday of last week. As was announced in this correspondence, it was decided to call a general meeting of retailers from all points within a radius of fifty miles of New York City. All the associations in various retail lines within the city radius will be asked to send representatives. The date is October 27th next. The conference adopted a platform for itself as follows: First—The passage of the Stevens bill. Second—The elimination of coupons as a trade factor. Third—The prevention of fraudulent advertising. The promoters of the enterprise say they expect to have 25,000 retailers represented on October 27th.

Mr. G. Harold Powell, manager of the California Fruit Canning Exchange, spent some time in New York last week and while here said some interesting things about the middlemen in connection with the business of his organization. Powell thinks that both jobbers and retailers are indispensable middlemen in the fruit business.

Mr. Powell thinks there is a great future for the California lemon. Some reference was made to this in a recent issue. He said that when the 20,000 acres of lemon trees, which are about to begin to bear, begin to get into work in the shipments of California lemons will be double what are to-day, and the State will be producing more lemons than the United States and Canada are consuming at the present time. The total consumption in the United States is now about 13,000. Last year without anything the 20,000 acres referred to at California harvested 6,658 carloads of lemons. The Exchange expects to advertise California lemons as an enormous business.

The large packers of canned goods have been for some time complaining that certain wholesale grocers were getting secret information as to the stocks of canned goods in packers' hands. Of course they will use this in business. Secretary George W. Drake, of the Western Canning Association, has been investigating to find where the leak was and he claims that it is in the offices of the Western Union Telegraph Co.

Secretary Drake complained that the Western Union Co. that its confidential reports on crop conditions, future sales, spot holdings, packing prospects which had been issued by the Western Association to its members had leaked out to brokers and jobbers. He mentioned a case in which a representative of the Western Union Co. had seminated this information for the benefit of brokers and jobbers. The telegraph company replied that it was its custom to gather the information wherever it could and place it in the hands of its patrons. The matter is not yet settled.

SUMMARIZED MARKET CONDITIONS.

Tea in light demand without change in any line.—Coffee slightly firmer and a fractional advance is noted for Rio, Santos and Milds. There is no indication of any radical change in coffee. Java and Mocha unchanged and quiet.—Sugar unchanged from a week ago on a basis of 4.90 for granulated. Beans have sold as low as 4.69, but are the week somewhat firmer.—Dried prunes are firmer and active on account of scarcity, shipments from the coast having been delayed by Panama accident. Currants also firm on account of short crop prospects. Apricots firm and fairly active. Other dried fruits quiet.—Rum unchanged from a week ago, many packers of pink having withdrawn.—Tomatoes firm and unchanged. Maine corn pack fixed at 50 to 55 per cent. Other canned goods quiet.—Wheat somewhat firmer on Government report of enormous crop, though the market is still higher than a week ago.—Flour is also higher on account of advance in wheat.

Report of Business Failures in the First Nine Months of 1915.

Shows About Forty Per Cent. More Disasters Than in Same Period of 1914, as the 1914 Report Only Included Two War Months. Twelve States Had Fewer Failures Than in 1914.

Most interesting is the official report of business failures for the first seven months of 1915. The first nine months of 1914 only included two months of the war, which means that only a few of the many American failures caused by the war figured in the report. Naturally the report would look much worse on that account.

During the first nine months of 1915 every State in the Union showed more failures than in the corresponding months of 1914, except the following: New Hampshire, Delaware, District of Columbia, South Carolina, Montana, Idaho, Wyoming, Arizona, Utah, Nevada and Oregon. The total number of failures in the whole United States in the above period of 1915 was 17,288; in 1914, 12,841.

The full report is as follows:—

Are You Ready for Coffee Week?

The National Coffee Roasters' Association calls the attention of the trade in this issue to Coffee Week, which will be celebrated all over the United States from October 18th to 23d. The effort is to sell more coffee—to get more people started to drinking coffee by showing them its many advantages—in a word, to concentrate public attention for one week on coffee as a beverage. This has to be done very largely through retail grocers, as they are distributors, and, incidentally, will be the chief beneficiaries. Every retailer should have a hand in this.

In a recent article I pointed out what I considered a decided danger

Regarding the Stevens Bill.

to the retail trade in the pending Stevens bill, which seeks to give manufacturers the right to fix the retail price of their products. The danger was that retailers would be prevented from reducing prices on odds and ends of stock which they wished to clean up. Unless these were physically damaged or deteriorated, the price could never be reduced without the manufacturer's consent, which consent would probably always be withheld. The American Fair Trade League had been making a clumsy effort to convince retailers that this danger did not exist, and that such goods would be "deteriorated" within the terms of the act, and so could be cut at the retailer's will after giving the manufacturer a chance to buy them back at cost. This effort was either ignorant or intentionally deceitful.

Mr. E. A. Whittier, the hard-working secretary of the American Fair Trade League, has sent to trade papers all over the country a supposed answer to any criticism. No stronger proof of the truth of the criticism is needed than the answer to it. Here is the gist of it:—

It is entirely beside the point—and mere dust throwing—to proceed to argue, as this Stevens Bill critic does, that the word "deteriorated" does not cover "seasonable" goods—goods which by reason of change of fashion or season has depreciated in selling value.

In the first place, the League has never presumed to predict the legal interpretation of the word "deteriorated." The two statements which comprise the League's comment, quoted above, are entirely separable and only their brevity makes it possible for raising a question of the League's meaning. In other words, the first statement is that "maintained prices as legalized in the Stevens Bill will not prevent important seasonable reductions in prices, upon which most housewives depend." This is literally true, because it is not anticipated that the Stevens Bill will ever be used in connection with goods of transient fashion or vogue.

No intelligent and sincere person has ever imagined—and only the price cutters' spokesmen have ever suggested—that any manufacturers would attempt to market, under the Stevens Bill, articles subject to quick depreciation without providing for disposal sales at appropriate times by filing new schedules of prices under the terms of the act, nor has it, so far as I know, ever been imagined or suggested before that, if any manufacturers attempted to do so, intelligent retailers could be persuaded to take the chance of buying goods of changing fashion under the restriction of a standard price system.

What Mr. Whittier thinks the manufacturer might do after the Stevens bill is passed is interesting, but not so interesting as what the manufacturer might do under the bill as now framed. If the Fair Trade League is really acting in good faith toward the trade, it will end the whole controversy on this point by amending the bill so odds and ends of stock and unsalable goods can be cleaned up without the manufacturer's consent.

Useless Controversies.

The following is an extract from an article in the "National Food Magazine":—

When is a container not a container? I believe it is not when it is a piece of waxed paper wrapped around a loaf of our daily bread to keep it sweet, clean and wholesome for our table. This is an entirely opposite view of containers from that held by State Food Commissioner W. Scott Matthews, of Illinois. He held that the wrapping on bread is a container within the meaning of the Illinois statute, which is practically identical with the Federal law.

He continues in a newspaper letter:—

"I think it is possible that we may in the near future rule that all bread should be wrapped, and if so, that will carry with it that it must all be stamped with the weight."

A similar controversy is waging in California and particularly in New York, as well as in some other States, over whether the casing on hams and bacon makes them package goods under the law. The point is that if it does, they must bear the net weight on the label, which is troublesome, as meats dry out and their weight varies.

Why cannot Legislatures say what they mean? Half of all the constitutional questions that reach the courts are squabbles over whether a law means this or that. Some laws are so carelessly worded they could mean anything. Quite often one party to a case argues that the law means one thing, the opposing party that it means another, and the court finds that it means something that neither of the parties had thought of.

More careful scrutiny of bills by the business interests which are to be subject to a given act, before, not after it is passed, would help the situation very much.

That is a very peculiar controversy which is waging between the Western Canners' Association and the Western Union Telegraph

Co. The association claims that certain confidential information which it has been giving its members regarding spot stocks, crop prospects, etc., has leaked to jobbers, to whom of course it was quite useful in buying. Here is its complaint to the telegraph company:—

It is our custom in the Western Association to issue, to our members only, confidential reports on crop conditions, future sales, spot holdings and prospects of pack. We have been annoyed by the fact that the brokers and jobbers seem to know about as much regarding these matters as ourselves. A careful canvass of the situation develops the fact that our reports were not leaking, and yet the information that the jobber had seemed to be very close to facts. I quote three paragraphs from my informant's letter, which indicates that your employees at the different points where canning factories are located make an effort to obtain this information and pass it back to some one, who in turn gives it to the jobber.

Suppose your company, who so generously endeavor to get information for the jobbers, would face about and inquire of these gentlemen how many cases of corn, or tomatoes, or peas they had on hand, what additional requirements they would need, and give to the packers of the country this information, so that we, as manufacturers, by the use of your wires, could solicit the jobbers in selling any stocks that we might have to offer.

I am satisfied that if your agents would once try this, they would be forced to acknowledge, when inquiry was made by us for the same, that the jobbers absolutely refused to give any information. Such being the case, can you imagine why we should want to unbosom ourselves to the jobbers of the country; or, in other words, place them in possession of what little knowledge we had of our own business, while they maintained a stolid silence as to their requirements and stocks on hand? I trust you will see the logic of my arguments without further explanation.

It seems a great mistake for the canners not to feel that they can deal with their customers in absolute candor. Their argument practically amounts to this: that the confidential information that they talk about, if it reaches the jobbers, will hurt the canners' business. How will it hurt the canners' business unless the canners expected to take advantage of the jobbers' ignorance? Certainly the canners don't want to appear unable to run a successful business unless they take advantage of their buyers' ignorance. This cannot be believed for an instant, yet their attitude might easily be so construed.

Note too that "confidential information on crop reports" are among the data which the canners think jobbers are not entitled to have. In Heaven's name, why? If it is because the packers paid for gathering it, and therefore want to keep it for themselves, all right. But it is because they think the jobbers have no right to such information on general principles, then I respectfully suggest that such a statement is wholly preposterous.

That is an interesting argument from a Canadian retailer in issue. He believes that most of the present evils of the trade come from an excessive number of stores and he tells how, in his own town, where there are seven stores, the situation could be overcome.

He would consolidate the seven stores into one large one, and he makes out a pretty strong case. Each of the seven men would turn in his stock, taking a share in the consolidated business corresponding to his holdings. He would then presumably work for the consolidated store on salary. The saving would be in bookkeeping, clerk hire, rent, delivery—everywhere. But the benefit would come from the fact that profits would no longer be endangered by reckless competition among the seven.

This would be a most effective way of curing trade difficulties, in a way which would benefit consumers as well as the merchants, for a consolidated store, run on this , would be a far better store any of the seven individual es, and what is more, it could ably afford to sell cheaper. ther such a thing could be , either in this country or Can- under the anti-trust laws, is ource another question.

ne Kellogg decision, repro- d and discussed from a legal standpoint in an- other column, has been published in all the newspapers n epoch-marking decision, but arks no epoch and has practi- no effect on the general price- g situation. It simply decides the Kellogg Co. may not tie ers up by an actual agreement to cut the price. It may not o all the jobbers in Philadel- for example, and make them a contract to sell Kellogg's for less than $2.80. The court s that that would be in re- nt of trade, as it would prevent obbers from competing among selves on Kellogg's Corn es. So that from now on—in the Kellogg Co. stopped the ement business quite a while ago—the Kellogg Co. will not make its jobbing customers agree to resell at $2.80. But all the same, if they don't resell at $2.80, they will be cut off the list, and if any other jobber sells them, he will be cut off the list. The agreement never was necessary, as a matter of fact—the Kellogg Co. had complete protection right in its own hands without it.

Nor was it ever necessary to intimidate retailers as to cutting, or to fasten a patent notice on them. The Kellogg Co. without that could always have found out what jobber supplied the cutter and stopped selling him. It can still do that just as freely.

P. R. R. Will Now Strike at Middlemen.

In furtherance of the direct market- ing system, it is reported that the Penn- sylvania Railroad is about to issue a new edition of its "Directory of Fruit, Vegetable and Produce Growers and Shippers," containing the names of more than 10,000 farmers, truckmen and orchardists in New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Delaware, Maryland and Virginia, traversed by the lines of the Pennsylvania Railroad. The purpose is to induce consumers to deal direct and cut out retailers.

"Modern Merchant and Grocery World" Makes Compilation of Products for Which Demand is Being Created Through Leading Periodicals. Papers and Magazines Used as Basis Cover Entire Country.

[The compilation which appears below is the result of more thinking along a line which was given some discussion several months ago, viz., the advantage to the retailer of keeping posted as to what products are being advertised to his customers, so that he may get the benefit of such advertising, if the product is for other reasons a desirable one to sell. The list here presented includes practically every leading magazine and periodical, and products that are not advertised in at least some of them are hardly advertised in this way at all, although they may be in newspapers or in direct ways, such as sampling, demonstrating, etc.]

Something Interesting to the Housewife!

DEAR MADAM:

Judging by the comments in the local papers and the talk of the street, there seems to be a misunderstanding of the objects and aims of the Essex County Retail Grocers' and Butchers' Association.

The grocers of this vicinity have no desire to prevent the consumers obtaining their household supplies as reasonable as possible, but they seek a method whereby unfair and dishonest competition may be eliminated. The retail grocer knows that he can compete successfully with the "chain store" if the buying public understands the situation correctly.

All things considered, the "chain stores" sell no cheaper than the regular grocer. They appear to, because goods of known value are often priced lower than cost, and the impression created is that all goods they sell are similarly low priced. Dependence, however, is placed on the unknown or doubtful article to pull up the average percentage of profit. They are not philanthropists and profits are essential to their success.

The magazine, "System," in an investigation of costs, found that the cost of doing business by the average grocer ranged from 12 to 18 per cent. Louis D. Brandies states that the "chain store" cost averages close to 25 per cent. This difference can not be overcome, as is claimed, by their superior buying power and the elimination of the jobber. They have to buy, assemble and distribute to their units, and this entails at least as great expense as the jobbers. There are few, if any, "chains" that have the purchasing power possessed by our local wholesale houses.

This leaves the saving on "service" to be considered. The "chain store" gets cash for its goods; the regular grocer extends credit when the wage-earner is sick or out of work. The "chain store" compels its patrons to carry their purchases home; the regular grocer takes the order at your door, or over the phone and rushes even a cake of yeast "special delivery." This service is worth paying for, and it is decidedly unfair to give the "chain store" the cash trade and use the regular grocer as a convenience in time of need.

There is another viewpoint that needs to be emphasized. The prosperity of our towns and cities is dependent on the large number of small dealers who go to make up its citizenship; what injures one, injures all. If the dollar that is made in our home town is all sent away, all suffer. The corner grocer gives trade to those who trade with him and each profits thereby. The "chain store" collector calls two or three times a week and takes the cash away to Jersey City or New York to make them richer and our community poorer.

Alfred D. Woodruff, food supply expert of the New York Association for Improving the Condition of the Poor, stated that he found over 10 per cent. of goods handled by these stores unfit for use. Miss Laura A. Cauble, Special Investigator, Bureau of Food Supply, Department of Social Welfare, New York, stated that there was 10.8 per cent. short weight and 16 per cent. of the foods sold by them were deteriorated or of low grade.

The legitimate grocer is always ready to give the best possible for the money and he asks for the same square deal from his fellow citizens that he is prepared to give.

The above is a reduced copy of a circular issued by the Essex County (N. J.) Grocers' and Butchers' Association. Mr. Henry Steinhart, Newark, N. J., a subscriber, sends it in with the statement that it is being distributed by all the members to customers who buy from the chain stores.

This is a good strong presentation of the case. Grocers everywhere could profit greatly by getting in touch with the public by discussion of trade questions like this.

Well-Known Paper Co. Standardizes Toilet Paper for the First Time in Its History.

Cloth is sold for "so much" a yard, oil at "so much" per gallon, and so should toilet paper be sold by a certain uniform measure of quantity—"It's the counted sheets that count." Never, of course, overlook the quality of the paper, for that is what gives a brand its real individuality, but the consumer wants to know how many sheets of a certain quality 5 cents, 10 cents or 25 cents will purchase.

In keeping with the lead the Scott Paper Co., of Philadelphia, have always taken to help dealers put their toilet paper business on a paying basis and standardize the method of sale, they will hereafter put out all their brands of toilet paper and towels on the count basis.

This step to establish an honest measure of value in buying and selling toilet paper is the outcome of the Scott Co.'s policy of standardization, which has led to large production on a few brands, and has made possible such values as will now be given.

From now on all their toilet paper labels will show the following counted sheets standard:—

ScotTissue Toilet Paper, 1,000 sheets, $4\frac{1}{2} \times 5$ inches, to the roll, for 10 cents. Stock No. 45.

SaniTissue Toilet Paper, 2,500 sheets, $4\frac{1}{2} \times 5$ inches, in a carton of 3 rolls, for 25 cents. Stock No. 33.

Waldorf Toilet Paper, 650 sheets, $4\frac{1}{2} \times 5$ inches, to the roll, for 5 cents. Stock No. 21.

With the counted sheet standard the Scott Co. adopted a standard size sheet $4\frac{1}{2} \times 5$ inches, and this same size sheet will be found in every roll. They have adopted this size believing, from experience, that it offers the consumer the best and most economical size sheet to be had.—Advt.

Why a Manufacturer Should Be Permitted to Fix the Retail Price of His Product.

Views of Various Believers in This Doctrine Who Offer Them as Arguments for the Pending Stevens Bill.

[The "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" has obtained and will from time to time present a series of statements by various well-known persons who believe that the manufacturer should have the right to tell the retailer what price he must get for the manufacturer's product. All of the views which will be presented can be taken as arguments for the pending Stevens Bill, which seeks to give a manufacturer that right.—Ed.]

No. 2.—By Dr. Lee Galloway, Professor of Economics of New York University.

The origin of the trade-mark shows it to have been established in the minds of the consumers at a great cost of money, energy and time on the part of the manufacturer. Provided, therefore, that the effort on the part of the manufacturer was justified, socially, what objection is there to supporting that property right in the same way as we protect other property rights of like nature?

The confidence which the manufacturer's trade-mark has created in the minds of the public is known as good will. In most cases this is as valuable an asset to him as his patents or his physical plant; and, like his property in his patents and his plant, he does not necessarily sell his good will rights when he passes his goods into the hands of other persons even though, as in the case of merchandise, it passed to the wholesaler or the retailer who expects to resell them.

The jobber or retailer who injures or impairs the good will of the manufacturer by destroying the confidence of the buying public in this particular product should be held responsible for it to the manufacturer. Therefore, I say, if price-cutting hurts the good will property rights of the manufacturer, then, in justice to the manufacturer and in protection of the public, some means should be adopted to prevent the pirating of the good name of those goods which have proved themselves worthy of the confidence of the consumers.

If price-cutting drives the superior goods from the market, either by compelling the manufacturer to stop making them or through a lowering of the quality of the goods, or in putting out a substitute of lower grade, and so compelling him to compete with himself, then in justice and protection of the consumer, such protection as is necessary for the encouragement of the manufacturer in maintaining his quality goods should be given to him by law.

In the trade-mark the manufacturer trusts his reputation; upon this he invests the enormous capital outlays necessary to inform and enlighten the consumer and the public. Experience has shown that the consumers learn to trust those trade-marked goods that prove worthy. They use them as standards in their buying. They have found this method most economical and satisfactory, for they know what they are getting, and so they save their time and energies in making extensive investigation with every purchase; and, finally, the manufacturer, knowing that his responsibility is at stake, strives to maintain his reputation even more energetically than he strives to increase his profits.

Thus, between the manufacturer and the consumer lies the trade-mark. It typifies responsibility on the one side, and confidence on the other. The price-cutter knows to his advantage of these two great factors in advertising, and wherever possible he exploits them on a special bargain counter. He can get little for the ultimate gains of the consumer so long as he is able to exploit the consumer's ultimate good for his own immediate gain.

Now, the trade-mark necessarily brings up at once the question of price maintenance, and, as Brandeis has pointed out, the manufacturer with the trade-marked goods wishes to maintain a certain price, for by maintaining his price he establishes confidence in the trade-mark, for naturally a constantly fluctuating standard of price suggests varying standards of quality. Hence if there is a constant price-cutting it reflects upon the quality of the goods and tends to drive those goods out of circulation in that particular community.

We would be pleased to have for publication in this column the ideas of our readers upon trade-mark. It being understood that we do not hold ourselves responsible for any views expressed therein. Communications must be accompanied by the writer's name and address as an evidence of good faith, and necessarily for publication. All inquiries within our power to answer will also be noticed in this department.

Business is Better, Says Well-known Manufacturer.

Baltimore, Md., Oct. 7, 1915.
To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—I have been asked my views regarding the business conditions as we see them in our territory, particularly as to the general conditions and outlook of the market.

I have just returned from a trip to Northern and Southern California, making a circle, and am delighted to state that conditions are improving very rapidly.

The bank clearance all over the country is very gratifying. There seems to be a marked lack of initiative, however, by those controlling large sums of money; they are certainly not investing but simply sitting—just why no one seems to know.

In talking with some of the men in Pittsburgh they stated they are running 100 per cent with good prospects ahead.

St. Louis I find quite dull, perhaps to the heavy rains in the district and contiguous territory but from Kansas City west seems to be very greatly improved. In fact, there is little complaint of any of the central or far West points.

The Federal Reserve Bank has created a very wholesome feeling ing the bankers, brokers, etc., are prepared to give all the working capital necessary for business purposes, notwithstanding the fact that the United States Treasury has offered $30,000,000 if necessary to move the crop. The South has never borrowed from the North so little money as they have this year, and they are getting it at a lower rate of interest, which means a profit to them of several millions.

In the South, in spots, there is a depression, owing to the boll weevil, storms, etc., but take it all in there never was a time when the prospects were much brighter.

Last year's cotton was raised at a price from 8¼ to 9 cents per pound, and the prospect of getting 9 or 12 cents is not out of reason. The cotton crop on an average increases from 20 to 25 per cent. short compared with last year, and the price is even better than it was last year.

While the markets abroad have been cut off from 25 to 33 per cent. of cotton, arrangements have been made to satisfactorily finance the cotton crop, and, as has been stated, many industries of this country present such a favorable outlook.

We believe that Dixie will put it on a higher plane on economic lines, working itself gradually to where it rightfully belongs, and another year will see the South in a far better condition than ever before.

The United States is fast becoming the banker for the rest of the world, notwithstanding the enormous amount of American securities that have been sold here by foreign holders in the last few months. England will no doubt secure a loan with the United States before long, paying a gold rate of interest. This will shift the financial burden of the world to this country, and it is up to us to husband our resources and to arrange to liquidate even further American securities if they are offered.

There is very much better feeling towards the business interests in general, as well as towards the roads, steamboats, etc. There is every reason to expect a big business this year.

Very sincerely yours,
W. M. McCORMICK.

Keeping Sauer Kraut.

Shamokin, Pa., Sept. 29, 1915.
The Editor.

Dear Sir:—We would like to know if you can give us a little information concerning our sauer kraut. We have made kraut for years and have never had much trouble in keeping it nearly the whole year. But this year it doesn't keep. In three or four weeks when we open it up for sale it is sour enough, but it gets slimy and soft, yet we think that we cover, salt and weight it the same as other years.

Also, please let us know the address of a good reliable produce house, and would it be cheaper for us to buy in Philadelphia or Baltimore? We bought some sweet potatoes from F. Bonhage & Co., Baltimore, advertised as Jersey sweets, but there were a good many among them that were not Jerseys.

Also let us know where we can get a good book on window trimming and show card lettering.

Very truly yours,
E. K. BITTERMAN & SON,
Per J. M. B.

Sauer kraut would naturally not keep so well in the summer. These measures help: Be sure that a heavy stone is placed on top of the barrel, with a piece of cloth between the sauer kraut and the stone. The stone forces the kraut down and keeps the brine at the top, above the kraut. Also be sure to keep the barrel in a cool, dry place; in warm weather in a refrigerator.

We would suggest you getting prices from the following produce houses in Philadelphia: Burrell F. Ives & Co., 224 Dock street and A. Cancelmo, 113 Dock street. You must, of course, take into consideration the freight in comparing prices with Baltimore prices.

We really cannot recommend any book on window dressing and show card writing that we ever saw.

Another Trading Stamp Tax Law Held Unconstitutional.

A ruling just made by the United States District Court at Portland, Ore., gives a decided victory to trading stamp companies in that it nullified the Oregon law imposing a tax of 5 per cent. on the gross business done by merchants or trading stamp companies, where the trading stamps are redeemable in merchandise. The law was passed at the last session of the Oregon Legislature. Acting under its provisions, the Sperry & Hutchinson Co. notified the merchants dealing with it that its stamps would be redeemed in cash. The merchants filed a suit for an order restraining the Sperry & Hutchinson Co. from violating its contract by redeeming its stamps in cash instead of merchandise, the claim being made that this course would ruin the business of the complainants. A restraining order pending a final decision of the suit was issued on May 24th last. The case came before the United States District Court at Portland and this court has handed down a unanimous opinion that the tax is prohibitive, and as such in violation of the Constitution of the State of Oregon. The decision permanently restrains the Attorney-General of Oregon from enforcing the Statute.

The Grocery Markets

Tea.

There has been no change in the market during the week. Business is good and holders appear to be perfectly well satisfied with the situation. The tea which has been coming in price recently is a grade which is virtually new to the market. It is a poorer tea than has been gathered before, due to the fact that the tea market has been so high. Some of it has already been rejected by the United States Government, and more will be. The demand for this grade of tea is not large. Staple grades are unchanged for the week and in fair demand.

Coffee.

There has been a slight advance in the market for all desirable Rio Santos coffee during the week, due to the fact that some of the coffee afloat has arrived and has been absorbed without affecting the market; also that there appears to be somewhat better demand in this country. Prices still rule on a level, however, and the outlook is especially firm. Mild coffees are from $\frac{1}{4}$ to $\frac{1}{2}$ cent higher than a week ago, due mainly to the fact that Europe is buying rather freely and paying full values. Milds are cheap in spite of the advance. Mocha and Java are unchanged and Java being firm.

Sugar.

The sugar market is unchanged on last week's basis, 4.90 being the price of all refiners except the Federal which is 5 cents. Raws have advanced further and have been sold during the week at 3.69 to 3.78, which makes the present selling price of refined good, although the refiners are working on higher prices for raw sugar. The consumption for sugar has materially increased. Most of the sellers of California beet granulated have withdrawn from the market, as the price has gotten so low in Eastern markets that they can do better elsewhere.

Syrup and Molasses.

Cose remains unchanged for the week. Compound syrup is coming up somewhat and shows a demand for the season. Prices are unchanged. Sugar syrup and molasses are unchanged and quiet.

Fish.

The mackerel situation is extremely critical. The supply of Norway mackerel in this country is becoming extremely light and very little of it is of first-class quality. Prices show no particular change for the week, as they were already very high. There is almost no Irish and domestic shore mackerel available at the present time, so that the market is getting pretty close to bare. Some Norway mackerel have been caught, but very few compared with the customary catch. Moreover, the season is nearing its end and the supply of new Norway mackerel available for this country will not be sufficient to bring prices down. The demand for mackerel is small. Cod, hake and haddock are in very fair demand at unchanged prices. Red Alaska salmon shows no change in price, although the slides in the Panama Canal and the consequent holding up of salmon shipments may affect the Eastern situation. Pink Alaska has had quite a career since it opened some time ago. The price opened at 75 cents then dropped to 65, and is now back again to 70, although many of the sellers have withdrawn from the market. Considerable poor pink salmon has been packed this year, and it will very likely affect the market adversely during the entire season. Spot red Alaska salmon has advanced since the opening of prices on new until it is now quoted at $1.52½ to $1.57½ in a large way. This gets it to about the level of new salmon. Domestic and imported sardines are all unchanged on last week's basis.

Canned Goods.

The tomato market continues firm on the basis of 87½ cents f. o. b. in a large way for Maryland 3s. No. 2s are about 20 cents below this. They are relatively more abundant and there is more pressure to sell them than to sell No. 3s. The pack is about over and the situation is now unchanged, although the exact volume of the pack will not be known for several weeks. The demand for tomatoes is fair. Corn is unchanged and still steady to firm on account of small supplies. Standard Maryland corn has sold during the week at 65 cents, as against 60 cents a few weeks ago. Some of the main packers have announced a delivery of 55 per cent. Peas are still heavy and dull, the market being unchanged. Apples are unchanged and quiet. California canned goods both spot and future (although the two are practically one to-day) are unchanged and in very light demand from first hands. Small Eastern staple canned goods unchanged and dull.

Dried Fruits.

Prunes on the coast are about unchanged and in the East the delayed shipments on account of Panama Canal slides have advanced prices very materially, and holders have been able to get as much as a cent a pound profit. The spot market will be firm until the ships begin to come through. Peaches are unchanged and in light demand. Apricots are steady to firm and selling fairly under the circumstances. Currants are extremely firm and most holders have withdrawn from the market. The foreign war situation, now that Greece is threatening to participate, makes future supplies of currants extremely uncertain and prices will continue high for some time. Raisins show no change for the week and fair demand. It is reasonably sure that there will be no new exports of figs or of Turkish Muscatels this year. There are some old Turkish figs carried over from last year, but they are not very desirable and the price is already 50 per cent. higher than normal. Dates are unchanged and their season is just about opening.

Beans and Peas.

Pea beans, on account of scarcity, have very sharply advanced during the week and the present large way quotation is $3.40 to $3.45. Marrows are unchanged on the basis of $5 per bushel. California limas are firm and inclined to be high on spot, but to come forward they have been sold during the week as low as $4.85. Green and Scotch peas are unchanged and dull.

Butter.

The butter market is active at an advance of 1 cent per pound. The consumptive demand is absorbing everything that arrives no matter what grade. The quality of the receipts is good for the season and apparently the market will continue to rule steady to firm for some time. There will be no foreign butter brought over this season because the markets on the other side are all higher than our markets.

Eggs.

The egg market is firm at an advance of 2 cents per dozen. New laid eggs are continuing very scarce and are commanding a premium even over the advanced prices. Storage eggs are also very firm at an advance of 1 cent. The consumptive demand is good and stock in storage is being rapidly reduced. The entire situation is healthy.

Cheese.

The cheese market is firm and unchanged with a moderate consumptive demand. The receipts are about normal and the market is expected to rule steady and about unchanged for some time to come.

Provisions.

All smoked meats, including picnic, regular and skinback hams, together with bellies and bacon, are firm at an advance of $\frac{1}{4}$ to $\frac{1}{2}$ cent. There is a good consumptive demand. Both pure and compound lard are firm at an advance of a half cent and a good demand is reported for both. Barreled pork, dried beef and canned meats are unchanged and in moderate demand.

INDIVIDUAL MARKET REPORTS.

Imported Fish Specialties.

There has been practically no change in the market situation of imported food products during the last week. Our agents in Holland report that prices for Holland herrings are advancing continually, with a heavy demand from Austria, Russia and Germany, while fishing continues to be very light. While weather conditions on the Holland coast are quite favorable to fishing, the fishing results are absolutely unsatisfactory, which cause prices to rise steadily. Up to date about 201,000 barrels of herrings have been landed, against about 184,000 barrels at the same time last season, and the auction prices this year for Holland herrings are just about double what they were at this time last season.

Our agents in Norway report a continuous advance in the prices of Norway herrings, scant supplies and big demand. In spite of the enormous prices that we are obliged to pay for all kinds of herrings, the demand here is very good and there is a good consumption demand, although trade only reluctantly pays those high prices.

A similar situation exists in the stockfish market. Prices for all grades are almost double what they are in ordinary seasons, and supplies are very hard to obtain; in fact, some grades of stockfish are absolutely unobtainable this season.

French sardines we can eliminate because there are practically none to be had. The little that is obtainable of this commodity does not count. Portuguese sardines are getting rather scarce in this market, and new supplies are very difficult to obtain. Holders of the small stocks here have finally wakened up to the fact that they have been selling their goods way below market, and once they have disposed of their stocks they cannot replace them at anything near the prices which they have been selling at. Consequently, the small stocks remaining here are held at higher prices. In Norway, unfortunately, the fishing has been very poor of late, and with the enormous demand prevailing in the primary market, we find it almost impossible to secure further supplies, at least for the moment, at anything near satisfactory prices.

STROHMEYER & ARPE Co.
New York.

Rice.

The market for the past week has been of an improving tendency. The slow arrivals of new stock have greatly interfered with the distribution, but the trade are evidently becoming satisfied that prices for good to fancy styles of Honduras are on a safe basis for operation, and are filing their orders for delivery as soon as possible. Blue Rose is still firm under limited demand, and the general opinion prevails as to a lower tendency. Japan sorts are scarce and firmly held, as the demand at present exceeds the supply.

Advices from the South along the Atlantic coast show little change over last week, and the demand being slightly below normal. Fancies are not moving in any volume up to the present. There have been a couple of lots of Carolina offered without takers, on account of the prohibitive asking prices.

In the Interior, Southwest Louisiana, Texas and Arkansas, the market continues strong at current prices. Owing to some farmers holding rough at higher figures than the mills are able to pay, two or three are reported to have closed down, awaiting adjustment of values on rough.

D. TALMAGE'S SONS Co.
New York and New Orleans.

Sugar.

Refined Sugar.—Refiners' list quotations continue unchanged, basis fine granulated 4.90 cents. We have been able to buy sugars from several refiners recently basis fine granulated 4.85 cents.

The market closes with a better feeling, in sympathy with the strong and higher raw market.

New business is fair to good from day to day, but for actual needs only. Shipments from Philadelphia can be made immediately.

Raw Sugar.—The situation ruled much stronger on Thursday, with speculators and refiners buying 40,000 bags Cubas for October shipment at 2 3/4 C. & F. equal centrifugals 96 test at 3.76 cents, duty paid. Seventy thousand bags Porto Rico sugars were also sold to-day, part spot, balance October shipment, at 3.75 cents, landed to the American.

The market closes firm in all positions, with some holders now asking equal 4.01 cents, duty paid. Future sugars on the Exchange also close strong and considerably higher.

At the next session Congress will be asked to continue the present duty on sugar, and if the recommendation is approved, sugars will not be admitted free on May 1, 1916. This no doubt is having its influence on the situation to-day. Should the duty on sugars be continued, the general tone of the market may improve. The beet sugar interest will not show so much anxiety to move their goods, and will not care to press them for sale in the Eastern territory, where freight rates are so much against them.

Michigan and Ohio Beet Fine Granulated.—These sugars are now offered for shipment within the next two or three weeks in barrels, bags and bags 4/25 lbs. at basis 4.70 cents in Eastern territory, not including Philadelphia or New York.

J. H. HUSTON Co.
Philadelphia, Pa.

Spices.

The market is exceedingly active, all articles being in good demand. There is a firmer undertone, especially for peppers, red peppers, cloves and gingers.

Pepper.—Has been in active demand during the week. The available stocks here have been rapidly taken up. Prices have advanced, with every indication of going higher. White peppers are distinctly firmer, especially for prompt shipment.

Cloves.—Are in better demand, and are scarce at present. It is now predicted we will have higher prices for some time to come.

Mace.—Scarce and in better demand for all grades. Prices steady.

Nutmegs.—Spot supplies have been greatly decreased during the week. Prices remain unchanged.

Cassias.—Saigon and China grades are higher and in much reduced supply. Batavia in fair demand at generally unchanged prices. Ceylon cinnamon is higher in all positions.

Gingers.—In better demand at sharply higher prices.

Green Ginger Root.—Still selling fairly well. Prices are lower.

Tapiocas.—In fair demand at generally unchanged prices.

Paprikas.—Unchanged during the week. Consumption is up to the average.

Standard Canned Goods.

The end of the tomato canning season of 1915 is in sight. Fully 80 per cent. of the canneries were in operation this season and have already closed down, and steam will be shut off during the coming week in the remainder of them. The history of the season to date has been written up so fully and published to the trade in weekly installments, that those who are interested in the goods know the story by heart. Crop conditions last spring were most encouraging at the start. The acreage was equal to that of 1913 and 1914, and the plants set out thrived splendidly and grew apace, producing large, luxuriant vines that gave much promise; but, alas, the extraordinary weather conditions that followed put a "crimp" in the expectations. The temperature during July and August was more like that of October, and the rainfall beat all records of the Weather Bureau. There was a rainstorm nearly every day in August, accompanied by heavy hailstorms and high winds on several occasions. The vines ran more to foliage than to fruit, and the blossoms that were expected to produce the late tomatoes, in September and October, were mostly destroyed. The early maturing fruit was rain-soaked and off-color for lack of warm sun, when in the first half of September came a spell of extremely hot weather, lasting ten or twelve days, which scalded the fruit and withered the vines. The results are now apparent. If, in the face of these conditions, the tomato crop can come back during October, it would be nothing short of marvelous.

During the week the buying of tomatoes at the advanced prices increased, and the orders again came from nearly all sections of the country. Markets that seldom buy here bought liberally and their orders were for prompt shipment, indicating immediate need of the goods. Should this kind of buying continue during the first half of October, the stability of the market prices during the winter will be established. The present indications are that the market will be active and that prices may be a shade higher.

For the other lines of canned vegetables there was an increase of buying orders during the week in point of number, if not in size, with corn, sweet potatoes and spinach in the lead, with an upward tendency as to prices. The business in the other items seems to be running to pool carloads, containing a half dozen different articles, evidently to mend broken stocks. The cheapest grades of peas are going out steadily in these pool cars, and so are string beans, wax beans and lima beans. The buying has not been sufficient, however, to cause any material improvement in the prices.

It was a quiet week in fruits, altogether, for this time in the season, and the quotations were unchanged for any of the items, excepting pears are a little higher. Unpeeled pie peaches were fairly active, and show an inclination to advance. Seconds table peaches were bought in small lots, but for standards and extras there was nothing doing. There were no changes in the prices of berries, cherries and pineapples and the orders for them were small. The blight in the pear crop is reported to be more serious than before reported, and that has stirred up some buying of them.

Law Suit Decided Over Brinser's Corn Meal.

Son of S. C. Brinser, Middletown, Pa., Manufacturer Starts in Business for Himself and Imitates His Father's Label. Court Issues Injunction.

An interesting case involving the right to sell corn meal as "Brinser" buckwheat has just been decided by the courts of Dauphin County, Pa. S. C. Brinser, of Middletown, Pa., has been selling corn meal in packages since 1878. It was labeled "Standard Corn Meal. Manufactured by S. C. Brinser, Middletown, Pa."

Some time ago Harry R. Brinser, a son of S. C. Brinser, who had been working with his father for a long time, had a fight with the latter and left. He at once started in business as the "Brinser Milling and Feed Co. of Middletown, Pa." and packed corn meal under the label, "The Brinser Golden Leader Corn Meal." S. C. Brinser at once asked the court for an injunction and got it on the ground that the packages used by Harry R. Brinser so closely resembled S. C. Brinser's packages that the public would probably be deceived. H. R. Brinser may still sell corn meal, but not by taking advantage of the Brinser name.

Something More About Standardized Coffee.

Your old friends, Wm. B. Harris Co., of 65 Front street, New York, tell us something more about Harisco Stand-

Here Is Your Question Answered

Why put in Croft's Swiss Milk Cocoa when you are selling five brands now? Well, because it is different from the rest, for one reason. It is the only cocoa packed in glass. It stands alone, and you know how novelty helps a thing to sell. The grocer who infuses a little novelty into his business is the grocer who succeeds.

Another thing, Croft's Swiss Milk Cocoa is better than the rest. That isn't a bluff, honestly. We take out of our cocoa, in the making, a substance which other manufacturers allow in, greatly to the injury of the flavor of their goods.

Now do you know why you should sell it?

What's More Important Than Figuring Profits.

I read that article in last week's issue about how to figure profits. Of course to a French and German reader like me, that sort of stuff is pretty dry reading. All the same, I got through it.

But will the kind gent tell us how to get some profits? It's a cinch to count 'em after you get 'em, seems to me. There's a million fellows who can tell you how to figure the thing after you've got it in your hand. Not as many can tell you how to get 'em, can they?

Like the recipe in the cook book how to cook the rabbit—"fust git de rabbit."

I remember my old boss—you know I started my grand career working as chief boy in a country grocery store. I've told you that, ain't I? I was only a kid but I was chief boy—big job for as young a kid as I was.

How many boys did they have? You ask too blamed many questions—how can I talk if you're butting in all the time?

What I started to say was this. My old boss had the greatest scheme for figuring his profits I ever saw. All he did was to add 50 per cent. to the cost of everything. I don't know what it cost him to do business—he never knew either—and of course my salary was a big tax on him, but I don't suppose it cost him more than 20 per cent. at the outside. Maybe what I ate would have run it up to 25 per cent.; I don't know. But even at that, he had a juicy margin left, and he got rich on it.

It's sure a convenient scheme, ain't it? No blamed figuring about the cost of this and the cost of that, or whether you ought to figure profit on the cost of your stuff or on what you sell it for—you don't need to care a ding about all that. Just add 50 per cent. and serve, as it were.

But if the old man was alive to-day, he'd have to learn some new tricks. He couldn't add his old 50 per cent. to-day in that town and get away with it. That is, he could add it all right—he could add a hundred if he wanted to—but when he tried to get people to pay it instead of going to the three chain stores that are up there now—he'd have a sweaty job. Wouldn't work even a little bit. If I were the old man I'd be glad I dropped out before the new stunts came in.

I was thinking the other day what would happen if you'd bring the old man back, set him down in the midst of business as it's run to-day and tell him to swim out. Show him the chain stores and the Economy stores and the department stores and the five-and-tens, and then tell him he had to beat 'em all with his little old store and his little old schemes. I'll bet the old man would fairly pray to go back to shoveling coal.

That may be a mean thing to say, but I've always figured that the very minute he turned me down when I asked him to raise me from $2.50 to $3 a week, that minute the gates of Heaven shut agin him. I told him plainly in my own mind at the time where he'd have to go.

I know it's raw to say mean things about a man after he's dead, but I never had a chance to say 'em before. All the time was took up then by his saying mean things to me.

Nope, the old chap wasn't a business man as they go to-day, although he was all right then. Don't you wish you'd been one of the old fellows, with none of these darned things to contend with? I suppose they had their own little things, but they sure do seem like child's stuff when you put 'em beside what we have now.

Collections was the only thing that really used to worry the old man. Gee, wasn't it a cinch? There wasn't any mail-order houses then, either, that's another thing, though Larkin was just beginning to sit up in his crib. But Larkin didn't amount to much, then—the old man laughed at the scheme when it first struck the town. He wouldn't laugh now, with Larkin selling tons of soap up in the old town, and chain stores selling the rest of it 3 for 10.

Nope, I'll bet if the old man knows what's going on, he finds berth mighty comfortable, no matter what it is.

THE STROLLER

Dry Goods Business Active.

Marshall Field & Co., in their weekly review of the dry goods trade, say:

The current weeks shows a more active wholesale distribution of goods. There has been a larger tendency of buyers in the market. Collections are fair.

The advancing market on raw cotton has resulted in material advances in prices on cotton yarns and in many lines of cotton goods.

The conservative manner in which retail merchants have been buying during the last few months and their light commitments for delivery, have created a shortage in many lines of merchandise, which always means advancing prices, as well as uncertain deliveries.

Weekly Window Display Suggestions

Baking Powder Display.

About in the center of the rear of the window stretch a narrow piece of white muslin across and letter like the illustration, supplying the brand of baking powder where the dash is. Now cover the bottom of the window with white crepe paper. Get one of your customers to bake a good-looking cake with the brand of baking powder you are exhibiting and place it on a white napkin in the center of the window. Put a placard in the front of the window with the information like on cut. Place a bag of pastry flour in the center of the back of the window, and to each side make a pyramid of cake flour. In the front of the window, to each side, make pyramids of the small-sized cans of baking powder and in back of these use the large size. This display will win one customer at least—the lady who baked the cake.

Judging a Store by Baking Powder

Baking powder seems a little thing to you, but somebody will judge your store by it. We do not see how there can be but one opinion as to

Rumford Baking Powder

None can possibly leaven better or insure more wholesome food. Its absolute Purity, uniform strength and keeping quality make baking results most dependable, which means a pleased customer and that every can of Rumford you sell will sell other cans for you.

Rumford pays you a greater profit than any other high-grade baking powder—it will pay you to recommend it.

Watch the Turnover

THERE is nothing in your store which moves faster than sugar.

It flows in and out each week with the regularity of day and night. Your problem is to secure a moderate profit on each sale of sugar, so that multiplied by thousands of sales, your final profit will overtop the slow, large profit sellers.

The solution is in Crystal Domino Sugar Products—a right one for every purpose, always in sealed cartons, with weight and purity guaranteed. They save the multitude of small losses constantly present in over-weights, leakage, bags, twine and the open barrel.

The 10c. retail price of this carton makes these half-size tablets for tea and coffee a convenient purchase for everyone—everywhere.

American Sugar Refining Company

332.—The Bearing of the Kellogg Price-Fixing Decision on the General Price-Fixing Law.

Within the last few days another court decision has been handed down on the ever-fascinating question of price-fixing. In order to see how it affected the general situation, as explained from time to time in these articles, I have obtained a copy of the decree, and also a statement from the manufacturer against whom the decision was rendered. The case was that brought by the United States Government against the Kellogg Toasted Corn Flakes Co. in the United States Court of the Southern District of Michigan.

Several months ago the Government began suit against the Kellogg Co. on the ground that its method of selling its corn flakes was a violation of the anti-trust acts and an interference with competition. The plan which the Government objected to was this: The Kellogg Co. sells corn flakes in cartons. Its invariable price to the retailer in any quantity is $2.80 per case, and the fixed price to the consumer is 10 cents a carton. The Kellogg Co. got a patent on its carton, having no connection with its corn flakes, and claimed that this gave it all rights that any patentee had to fix the price at which its product should be sold by jobber and retailer. At that time it controlled the jobber by making him agree to resell only at $2.80 and threatening him with penalties if he did not, and it controlled the retailer by notifying him and practically making him agree to resell only at 10 cents. In addition to this, every package bore this notice:—

This package and its contents are sold conditionally by us with the distinct understanding, which understanding is a condition of the sale, that the package and contents shall not be retailed nor advertised, nor offered for sale at less than 10 cents per package. Retailing the packages at less than 10 cents per package is a violation of the conditions of sale, and is an infringement on our patent rights, and renders the vender liable to prosecution as an infringer.

KELLOGG TOASTED CORN FLAKE CO.,
Battle Creek, Mich.

Both jobber and retailer were notified that if they broke the price they would be cut off. In one case a buyer did break the price and was sued by the Kellogg Co. in a State court, which upheld the legality of the plan by granting an injunction.

There were some legal skirmishes over the Government's case, and the Kellogg Co. finally agreed that the court should make a decree against it enjoining it as follows:—

(a) From requiring jobbers to enter into any agreement or understanding to resell toasted corn flakes purchased from defendants at a price fixed by defendants, and from suggesting to said jobbers, in writing or otherwise, that if they fail or refuse to observe said fixed price they will be cut off from a further supply of said product.

(b) From exacting in any manner from retailers of toasted corn flakes any agreement or understanding that they shall sell the same at a price fixed by defendants, and from suggesting to said retailers, in writing or otherwise, that if they fail or refuse to observe said fixed price they will be cut off from a further supply of said product.

(c) From packing or selling said toasted corn flakes in cartons or boxes having thereon the following notice, to wit:

(Text of this notice appears above.)

The Kellogg Co. very kindly sent me the following statement giving their interpretation—and I suppose their counsel's—of the decree:—

We fought the case vigorously and recently, after consultation with the best legal advice that we could secure and with others interested in price maintenance, came to an agreement with the United States attorneys upon an amicable settlement and an agreed decree that enjoins certain practices which the Government officials view with disfavor and which we have not used for some years.

It, however, preserves to us our basic sales right of selecting our customers, providing there is no conspiracy, agreement or understanding with others in reference to whom we shall select. The decision enjoins us from requiring either jobbers or retailers to enter into an agreement or understanding to resell the Toasted Corn Flakes purchased from us at a price fixed by us, and from stating that if they fail to observe said fixed price they will be cut off from further supply. It further enjoins us from printing on our boxes and cartons the notice which formerly appeared there.

For some years, as you know, we have had no contracts with jobbers or retailers aside from the patent notice on our cartons as to resale price, and as we have had no such contract we obviously have not endeavored to enforce such; and in view of this widely known fact the consent decree only prohibits old and abandoned methods.

The patent notice we will discontinue, although when we adopted this notice it was upon competent legal advice and in good faith, believing it to be lawful. Since, however, the court believes it not legally justified, we agreed to abandon it.

Now let us see how all this fits into the situation as to the pricing law, as it existed before. It did not affect it at all. When the case was begun, the Kellogg Co. sold only to jobbers, which indeed is present practice. It was going to jobbers and making them sign an agreement—it stopped this some time ago—on penalty of being cut off, to resell at $2.80. It could go to all the retailers, since it did not sell them, but it made it difficult to retailers in various ways, which included the notice reproduced above, that they must resell at 10 cents, or they would find their supplies cut off. The latter result the Kellogg Co. would bring about by forcing the jobber who had sold to the retailer to cut him off.

The court says now that the Kellogg Co., and of course any other

Possible Cases Under New Pennsylvania Workmen's Compensation Act

Becomes Operative Next January 1st, and Makes all Retail Merchants Within the State Liable for Accidents to Their Employees While Latter are at Work.

[Inasmuch as the new Pennsylvania Workmen's Compensation Law which becomes operative next January 1st, affects every grocer and general storekeeper within the State, the "Modern Merchant and Grocer World" will publish from time to time some possible cases which may arise under it, in the experience of the average grocer or general storekeeper. A full digest of the act was published in the issue of July 26th last. Readers hereof will remember that it practically makes it compulsory for employers to pay damages to employees who meet with accidents in the course of their regular work.—Ed.]

Possible Case No. 3.

John Jones, grocer, employs William Brown, a solicitor, to go after orders from house to house. Like most grocery clerks who do this, Brown knows his customers well and is on a friendly footing with them. He goes to a customer's house one morning for orders, as usual, and while chatting with a member of the family, preliminary to getting the order he is called upstairs by the woman of the house and asked to help move a bureau from one floor to another. It was purely an act of friendship and Brown is called on because he is available.

Half way down the stairs the bureau slipped and fell on Brown, breaking his arm and his leg and otherwise injuring him severely. The reason for the bureau slipping was that the hands of the husband of the customer, who had the end, were oily from having run a sewing machine. The husband remarked on his hands being slippery before he took hold of the bureau, but said he guessed he could hold it. Brown is called to his house for several days and is lame even after he gets out.

In this case John Jones would not be liable to Brown at all, for the law only covers accidents arising in the course of the employee's business. The moving bureau was not Brown's business, or his employer's. Brown, however, would have a perfect claim against the customer's husband whose carelessness was the cause of the accident.

manufacturer, may not require job-to sign or make agreements to at a certain price, and may threaten those jobbers to cut off if they do not so resell. may it notify retailers to sell certain price or threaten to interfere with those retailers' supplies if they do not. But what does all amount to, in the way of taking the Kellogg Co. any power it had before to stop cutting? If, as I see it, for the Kellogg right to choose its own customers to sell or not to sell, has not and cannot be interfered with. jobbers all know what price the Kellogg Co. expects them to sell flakes for; suppose one of sells at $2.65 or $2.70? No agreement has been made between the jobber and the Kellogg that the price should not be cut there is neither contract, suggestion nor the hint of it. But the Kellogg Co. merely exercises its fundamental right of choosing its customers and cuts the jobber off. as the jobber knows it will do and probably doesn't wish to cut it off, the same result is accomplished without an agreement or a hint, and he holds the price. as to the retailer—the Kellogg doesn't sell retailers—the commission has the same rights that it had before to stop retail cutting and to interfere with the supplies of a retailer. It had no real right before and it has none now—except to earn the name of the jobber who is selling the cutter and to cut that off. It can do that just as easily to-day under the above decree as it could before, and nobody can question it in the slightest degree. In other words, what a manufacturer may not do by agreement, understanding, suggestion or threat, can do just as effectively through the fundamental right of choosing its own customers.

That is why in my judgment the decree not only has no special bearing on the price-fixing situation, but will probably have none on the Kellogg Co.'s methods of selling its product, or the methods of any other manufacturer.

Question: T. J. Critchlow, Prosser, Pa.—A merchant who runs a store from a village to a city regulates three times a week has numerous requests from his customers to sell oleomargarine for them in the village. Can he safely carry the product without a license, and how could he do so?

Answer.—If the merchant buys the oleo in the city and resells it to his customer at a profit, he must have a license. If he merely acts as his customer's agent in buying it on the customer's behalf, charging no profit, he is then not reselling it and no license is necessary.

NOTE.—Requests for information in this department should tersely set out in full all the facts bearing on the case, and all questions should be carefully framed to avoid misconstruction. Write on one side of the sheet only. Letters should be received at this office not later than Tuesday of each week, to ensure an answer in the Monday's issue following. The signature and address of the writer must accompany all inquiries, and will be published unless there is a request not to do so. All inquiries received will be answered without charge. Address all communications to Legal Editor "Modern Merchant and Grocery World."

Pennsylvania Organization Notes.

South Bethlehem conducted a successful Old Home Week October 4th to 10th. The streets were crowded and all stores and residences gaily decorated with bunting.

Harrisburg retail grocers have organized. It is expected to make this a strong association.

The Committee on Pennsylvania Plan has formulated rules for the year, which will be sent to all the associations. The committee, which is a permanent one, consists of E. J. Gallen, chairman; E. L. Heffner, A. Kaiser, J. A. Edgar and William Smedley.

A county convention of the merchants of Washington County is being arranged by the Washington Board of Trade. The object of the meeting is to secure united effort for trade reforms, county boosting and much needed local legislation.

Merchants and professional men of Ambler have organized a Board of Trade.

Steelton Merchants' Association celebrated its second anniversary on September 30th with an outing and dinner at Lingelstown. About 70 were in the party, most of the members were accompanied by their wives. The trip was made in a gaily decorated special trolley car. Preceding the dinner there were orchestral and vocal music, recitations, etc. B. F. McNear, Jr., acted as toastmaster and addresses were made by Chief Burgess Wigfield, Councilmen Wagenbaugh and Rice, President M. J. Kane, Messrs. Reiling, David Baker, Ralph Eckel and Organizer Smedley.

Plans have been made to boost Steelton and a campaign committee has been appointed for that purpose, consisting of the following: D. P. Baker, DANDELION BRAND BUTTER COLOR.

A Staple Article for Grocers Will be Selling Heavily Soon.

When pasture grows scanty and cows are being fed upon silage and dry fodder, grocers find that the sale of Dandelion Brand Butter Color increases materially.

lion Brand Butter Color increases materially.

Although this famous old staple product has a steady year round sale, during the fall and winter months grocers make their biggest profits from it.

The fact that Dandelion Brand Butter Color is purely vegetable recommends it to all butter makers. It gives the true June shade to butter, and does not in the slightest degree affect its flavor.

The Wells & Richardson Co., of Burlington, Vt., manufacturers of Dandelion Brand Butter Color, report to the publishers of this magazine that many grocers are preparing for window displays of Dandelion Brand Butter Color. Our readers will do well to consider putting in at least one window display of Dandelion Brand for one week during the fall months.—Advt.

THE SCIENCE OF ADVERTISING

Messrs. C. E. Engel & Co., Union Bridge, Md., send me in a card which they seem to have used to advertise a special sale, although there is nothing in the advertisement which exhibits it as a special sale except the prices. The card measures $9\frac{1}{2} \times 11$ inches and is here reproduced about one-fourth the original size:—

flat, with a one-cent stamp, or be distributed by hand flat. The copy sent me reached here in a very much crumpled condition, looking as if it had been out all night. Doubtless many of the copies distributed by hand had the same fate. Getting advertising matter into the prospective customers hands, clean and unrumped, is always desirable. Some nature which it pays to take advantage of when you can.

Current Outlook Scarce and Strong.

Contrary to all forecasts, even those made as late as August 1st, which predicted a rather larger harvest of currants than normal, the actual harvesting, which is now practically finished, seems to prove that the crop of 1915 will turn out hardly 130,000 tons of fruit altogether, as compared with a normal of about 155,000 tons. The quality of the fruit, too, which promised during the summer to be good, proves with harvesting to be only medium. The fruit was caught by rains in several of the provinces while it was upon the drying grounds, and large quantities of it became rain-damaged, especially Provincial and Amalias grades of currants, which are mostly shipped to the United States. Many of the local currant exporters made forward sales on the foreign markets, some as early as last May. These sales were practically all made at low figures, the merchants apparently calculating that with a large harvest predicted, and with foreign markets restricted by European hostilities, the market would be flat and prices nominal. In view of the short crop, however, the growers holding back their fruit and demanding prices unknown on this market for many years. Merchants who have made forward sales for September delivery must find fruit to fill their foreign engagements and are compelled to buy at whatever price they can. Most of them supposed that they had covered themselves safely by contracts drawn up by middlemen for delivery of fruit at an agreed price in September. Many middlemen, being unable to secure the fruit from growers except at great loss to themselves, have forfeited their contracts and left the exporters to fill their foreign engagements as best they could. To-day's prices, as given by two responsible export firms, are higher than 10 to 8 shillings per cwt. than the prevailing prices for same grades on October 1, 1914, when the local market had recovered from the shock of war and had become fairly firm for 1914-15 crop.

I have no doubt this got results, always provided it was properly distributed. The prices, many of them, are attractive. I think the special character of the sale—I assume it was a special sale—should have been played up better. According to this card, everything advertised on it has had the price cut. Why? Bargain hunters want reasons. It takes a very slight reason to satisfy them, but they want something. Cutting a price without explanation may get results; it undoubtedly will if the goods are standard and substantial, but it will never get as good results, in the average case, as a statement as to why prices are cut.

One thing about the shape and size of this card. It doesn't fold—it is meant to go through the mails people are very susceptible to that sort of thing. I once knew a woman who wouldn't even look at a piece of mussed, rumpled advertising matter—it looked like rubbish which somebody had thrown into the street. She was ready enough to look at clean advertising matter, however. It never pays to ignore these little things. I believe it would have paid to double this card over, right down the center, making it half the size, and fasten the edges of the two halves together with the one-cent stamp or a sticker. It would have been sure to reach the consumer in a much better condition and by the same token should have gotten results. Not only that, but closing it up would have appealed more to curiosity, which is another little peculiarity of human

To Be Unusual—Is simply to refuse to follow custom constantly, or not at all, as the case may be.

This week, beginning October 4th, cauliflower took a big jump—went $2.50 a barrel on Washington street. New York buyers passed it up. One little chap from a small town bought five barrels, and he had it expressed. He bought for a comparatively small concern. Everybody in that town for three days wanted cauliflower. No one had it but the little chap. No one had the nerve to handle it but the little chap. He made money on it, and of course it was a splendid ad. He was unusual.

* * *

So may you be in your own capacity, even though you can't for the present spread yourself by taking cauliflower chances.

Commence talking 15-cent tomatoes, because that price is likely to be the usual one before the season is over.

Go slow on war talk; a splendid fellow whom we know well lost the trade of one of his best hotel customers by being usual. He knew which side would win and proceeded to prove it.

Selling Talks With Clerks

BY A MAN WHO HAS BEEN ONE

Conducted by W. E. SWEENEY, Manager for L. Lehman & Co.'s
Department Food Store, Dover, N. J.

A five-gallon jar cider vinegar set in front of the counter, price $1.00. That clerk had a big idea. He was of the usual class.

Instead of sending the bread to the bakery next Saturday as was planned, we'll have it all down at once and put it in the window—just a little bit of unusualness.

"Push sweet potatoes this week," the boss. Frank (the unusual) rigged up a show tray and dumped barrels into it.

Let's start something, and suppose make it beans—pea beans—we're lo to the neck with them. We'll ta pot full and set pot and all in middle of the show.

It was a clerk's idea—the one the itching unusual habit. Did it work? It worked from the neck load to shoe strings.

All of which goes to show that to think is to be progressive, and to be progressive is to be happy, and to be happy is to be successful.

It's a mistake to let the boss do the thinking; steal a march on him every once in a while and whatever you hold, earn more than the job pays to-day.

Three Weeks More for the Window Display Contest—Ready?

The awards in the Window Display Contest of Lipton Teas will be made as soon after November 1st as is practicable. The contest closes that day. You have barely three weeks more.

The contest is for the five best window displays of Lipton's Tea. The "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" will give to the five retail dealers who make the most attractive window displays of Lipton's Tea before the end of this contest, the following cash prizes:—

For the Best	-	-	-	-	$75
For the Second	-	-	-	-	$50
For the Third	-	-	-	-	$25
For the Fourth	-	-	-	-	$15
For the Fifth	-	-	-	-	$10

CONDITIONS:

1. The display entered in the contest must be of Lipton's Tea alone.
2. The display must remain in the window one week.
3. Each contestant must send to this office a photograph of his display or a careful detailed description of it. Naturally a picture would be better, though a contestant need not incur that expense if he does not wish to. Almost every family now has a kodak-user in it who could photograph a window display.
4. Each contestant if he decides to enter the contest, will kindly drop this office a postal card to that effect.
5. The contest closes November 1, 1915.

The Subscribers' Bargain List

Have you got any goods you don't want? Anything—canned goods, groceries, hardware, dry goods, anything at all that's in good condition, but won't sell for you.

If you will make a price on it we can probably sell it for you in a hurry. Write us about it, stating the quantity, condition and your best price. You might give the original cost, too. We will give it a key number and offer it to our 4,000 subscribers. Your name will not appear unless you want it to. All sales ought to be on a cash basis.

The point is that what won't sell for you may be in everyday demand for somebody else, who will be glad to get your stock of it at a bargain.

There will be no charge for this service anywhere—we do it to help along.

A Sales Repeater

FLEISCHMANN'S YEAST

is purchased, say, two or three times every week by the housewife who bakes. And every time she comes in for a "cake of yeast" you have a fine chance to talk up and sell her other things too.

THE VALUE OF BRIGHT STORES

The difficulty of making a sale—whether it be dry goods or vegetables, jewelry or shoes is increased tenfold in a poorly lighted store. Other things being equal, the Electrically lighted shop will do more business than the store which uses other luminants. "Indoor Daylight" can only be obtained by the use of Mazda Electric lamps.

BABBITT'S PURE CONCENTRATED LYE

"Keeps its strength to the greatest length" and that's why consumers know it's "The Lye to Buy." There are many uses for lye and its virtue all lies in the way it is made, just as its sale depends on the way it's advertised. We keep up its quality and strength. It is unequalled as a home soap maker, disinfectant and deodorizer. The new sifter top tin makes it handy for the consumer to use. Call your customers' attention to this new package and you have additional sales and profits. The Trade Marks are good for valuable and useful presents.

¶ This is the date Knight's Cooking Extracts first decorated grocers' shelves. Time, skill and experience combined have added to the perfection of these goods each year. If an old lady or a child is sent for a cooking extract without being told to get a certain brand, they'll ask for Knight's by instinct. This name naturally identifies itself with flavoring extracts in their minds. It's a household word and stands for the highest standard of excellence.

Food Prices in Some of the Warring Countries Are Lower Than Here

But Not in Germany and Austria, Where Prices Have Increased Several Hundred Per Cent. Remarkable Showing of Importance of Our Own Beet Sugar. American Tomato Sauce Has Chance in Norway.

Special Correspondence of "Modern Merchant and Grocery World."

Washington, D. C.,

October 14, 1915.

It is almost incredible, but is nevertheless true, that the prices of food products are lower in some of the European countries which are now at war than they are in the United States, which is not at war. In some instances prices in England are relatively lower than in this country, and the cost of commodities in Russia has, as a matter of fact, decreased in some particulars since last March, due to the opening up of some of the northern ports during the summer. The report from Petrograd shows that in August last beef was selling for 13 and 14 cents per pound. It has sold for 15 and 18 cents a pound in March previous. A like reduction in the cost of other provisions from March to August was shown by the official figures. During August filet of beef sold for 23 and 35 cents per pound; veal sold for 20 and 30 cents per pound; mutton for 15 and 20 cents; pork for 18 and 24 cents, and ham for 45 and 50 cents per pound. The Petrograd prices for meats have been upon a basis favorably comparable with the prices prevailing in the United States. In some instances the official report shows, the prices of products in Petrograd have been lower than prices prevailing in the United States. Kitchen butter sold for 24 and 27 cents per pound during August, and table butter for 35 and 40 cents per pound. Potatoes sold for 5 cents per pound during August. Eggs brought only 17 and 20 cents per ten. Kerosene sold for 3 cents per pound. Bread brought but 2½ cents per pound. Coffee sold for 50 and 75 cents per pound; sugar for 8 and 10½ cents per pound; silt for 1½ cents per pound; rice for 10 and 14 cents per pound; flour for 5 cents per pound. Chicken brought 75 cents and $1 a piece; heath-hen brought 75 cents and $1.50. Herring sold for 5 and 12 cents per piece.

Germany and Austria are the countries which are paying the most for their food products. It was reported that in Austria last August apples sold for 5½ and 14½ cents per pound, an increase of 50 per cent. since the beginning of the war. Bacon now sells for 47 cents per pound, an increase of 240 per cent. Cooking butter sells for 54 cents, increase 90 per cent.; table butter brings 62 cents, increase 65 per cent. Barley sells for 14 cents per pound, increase 250 per cent. Coffee brings 45 and 76 cents per pound, increase 33 per cent. Flour sells for 7 cents per pound, increase 75 per cent. Groats bring 14 cents per pound, increase 250 per cent. Honey sells for 45.5 cents per pound, increase 100 per cent. Vegetable lard sells for 32.8 cents, increase 200 per cent.; other lard brings 45.5 cents per pound, increase 100 per cent.

The increase in the price of meats has been 90 per cent. since the outbreak of the war. Pork now brings 43.5 cents per pound; veal, 43.5 cents; beef, 36.5 cents; smoked meat, 51 cents; mutton, 36.5 cents; lamb, 36.5 cents.

Rice sells for 14.5 cents per pound, increase 250 per cent. since the beginning of the war. Salt brings 3.5 cents per pound, increase 25 per cent. Sugar brings 9 and 10 cents per pound, increase 33 and 50 per cent. Soap costs 18 cents, increase 150 per cent. Kerosene costs 56 cents per gallon, increase 75 per cent.

Eggs now cost 39 cents per dozen in Austria. Their advance in cost has been 400 per cent. since the beginning of the war. Potatoes sell for 85 cents per bushel, the increase being 300 per cent.

In view of the several crises that have overtaken the sugar market during the European war, it is interesting to know that more than one-fifth of the 40 billion pounds of sugar that represent the world's production last year was consumed in the United States. The consumption of sugar in the United States, exclusive of its sugar producing islands, during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915, has been calculated by the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, Department of Commerce, as 8,630 million pounds, or 86 pounds per capita.

Of the sugar consumed in this country in 1914-15, 1,941 million pounds were produced on the mainland, 1,281 million pounds in Hawaii, 589 million pounds in Porto Rico, 327 million pounds in the Philippines, and the remainder in foreign countries. Cuba, the leading source of our imported sugar, sent us 4,785 million pounds in the last fiscal year, that quantity being nearly four times as much as that from Hawaii and eight times as much as that from Porto Rico.

Beet sugar now leads cane sugar by nearly 1 billion pounds in our own home production of sugar, having reversed the conditions which obtained 20 years ago. In 1895, for example, according to the Statistical Abstract of the United States, the domestic sugar product totaled approximately 775 million pounds, the share of beet sugar being only 45 million pounds. In 1915 our sugar product had increased to 1,941 million pounds, the share of beet having grown to 1,448 million and that of cane having decreased to 493 million pounds. Meantime beet sugar has practically disappeared from our imports. Eighteen years ago, when the Cuban supply of cane sugar was cut off by war, we imported nearly 2 billion pounds of beet sugar. After the return of peace in Cuba our imports of beet sugar fell off sharply, and in the last fiscal year beet sugar imports amounted to less than 1 million pounds.

The cutting off of the sugar supply of European countries has resulted in a remarkable expansion of our sales of sugar to foreign countries. For the fiscal year 1915 they aggregated 582 million pounds, as against 22½ million pounds in 1900 and 40½ million pounds in 1880.

Since Italy entered the war the price of canned tomato sauce ((purée)) has gone up in Norway, which is a large user of it in canned fish. Prices formerly ranged from $8.31 to $12.17, according to thickness of the purée, per 220 pounds.

Now prices range from $12.17 to $17.03. It is estimated that the district alone uses about 25,000 cases of the purée a year, and that perhaps 10,000 more cases are used in other parts of Norway. Each case contains 50 kilos (110 pounds). The pulp is used as dressing for canned fish by all fish factories, of which there are about 50.

It would seem that American dealers in tomato sauce might find a market in Norway if certain conditions were met. Very little American sauce has been tried, though a number of years ago certain American samples did prove satisfactory. The American sauce, when eaten with the fish, seemed to have a gritty taste. This is thought to have been due to the presence of too many seeds. The color was also not the rich red color of the best Italian sauce, which is guaranteed not to be artificial. This is important. Sauce of brownish color is not wanted. Both thin and thick purée is used, mostly thick.

The proper preparation of tomato product seems to be an art in which only Italy has succeeded, to do it Spain also supplies a small amount to this market, but Spain's contribution can not compare with Italy and packers have also noticed the gritty taste in the Spanish purée. Even French sauce has proved satisfactory. Some has been imported from England, but this is manufactured by an English firm in Italy.

Dry Goods Business in Good Shape

Marshall Field & Co., in their weekly review of the dry goods trade, say:

The dry goods business of the week has responded to the seasonable weather by an increase in wholesale shipments and more customers have been in the market than during the same period a year ago.

The low stocks that retailers are carrying makes wholesale distribution a very sensitive barometer of the current dry goods business throughout the country.

Collections show some improvement over those of the corresponding week last year.

The cotton market continues firm with strong upward tendency.

Your customers like the package way of buying tea

They know, and you know that tea is extremely delicate and sensitive; that it absorbs moisture, foreign flavors and the odors which happen to be near, from which it cannot be protected. They know that tea sold in bulk is apt to be dusty and damp—merely the form of tea; that the strength, aroma and refreshing properties have vanished. They want clean tea—

LIPTON'S TEA

They have learned from experience that Lipton's Tea is clean; that the sealed air-tight package protects it from dust, moisture and strange odors, retaining all the original strength and flavor that it bore from the famous Lipton Tea Estates of the Far East—the world's largest tea gardens.

And there are eleven blends in Lipton Tea, from which every customer can choose the particular tea that suits her particular taste.

The quality and price of Lipton's Tea have remained unchanged, although the price of other teas both in package and bulk have gone up because of the war. This is a point that you and your customer will appreciate; it means more tea business for you.

Why a Manufacturer Should Be Permitted to Fix the Retail Price of His Product.

Views of Various Believers in This Doctrine Who Offer Them as Arguments for the Pending Stevens Bill.

[The "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" has obtained and will from time to time present a series of statements by various well-known persons who believe that the manufacturer should have the right to tell the retailer what price he must get for the manufacturer's product. All of the views which will be presented can be taken as arguments for the pending Stevens Bill, which seeks to give a manufacturer that right.—Ed.]

No. 3.—By Laura A. Cauble, Special Investigator Bureau of Food Supply, New York.

An investigation recently undertaken by us covered an intensive study of 526 food shops in New York from the economic and sanitary standpoint. Tests of the character, quality, purity and physiological value of staple foods were made on 1,829 samples purchased in 146 stores. These stores included department stores, chain stores, large and small retail shops. Numbered samples of these foods were submitted to three of the most reliable wholesalers in New York with requests for prices at which the foods could be furnished for sale by a business house with large buying capacity.

1. Short weights and measures:

(a) There was 1.4 per cent. of short weight and measure in the small retail shops.

(b) There was a greater variation in the other shops, and a 10.8 per cent. short weight in the chain stores.

2. Quality of foods sold:

The investigation showed conclusively that 16 per cent. of the foods sold by the New York chain stores were deteriorated or of a low grade. It would take an expert in standard food values to know what that deterioration was. Was it because poor methods of storage and operation allowed the foods to waste (this was not true), or because inferior or deteriorated foods were purchased for sale, or because of business methods used to deceive customers?

Samples of tea were bought from several chain stores at 40 cents, 60 cents and 70 cents and were submitted to wholesalers for quotations. The quotations received on these teas were 24 cents and 25 cents per pound for a chest. The tea sold at these prices in the chain stores was all from the same chest. At 25 cents per pound the tea sold at 40 cents brought 60 per cent. profit; that sold at 70 cents brought 180 per cent. profit. That is the difference between honesty and dishonesty in business. It is not fair play to the consumer. A pound of tea will make 400 cups. One family pays 40 cents for 400 cups of tea; the other pays 70 cents for 400 cups. The poor do not get full value on the purchase, and dishonest advertising of quality of tea makes it possible to catch the unsuspecting buyer.

It was just the same with coffee, dried fruits and other foods. There is no standardization nor grading of any foods in New York (except milk, which is graded A, B and C, and which guarantees a measure of certainty to the housekeeper). If there were a fair system of prices and standardization of foods, this situation would be avoided.

In these stores the standard package goods were sold at cut prices, which compelled the small dealer on the same block to suffer the cut also. In the chain store inferior goods at high prices sold readily at the same time, because the housekeeper was there to buy. The small dealer is working from 12 to 18 hours, and even 20 hours, per day in an effort to make a living. In four months' personal observation in 526 shops there were 116 changes in business. Change in business means a failure to meet the conditions of the situation.

The dealers either went out of business or that a succession of owners attempted to carry on the business. When a man found the situation impossible he sold his stock and tried something else. The buyer found the cut-price competition ruinous and he became a willing seller. The cut-rate shops put up package goods of fine appearance, but of unknown quality, and sell standard goods below price to get the trade and sell their deteriorated goods. The small dealer can't meet this.

I speak for the Stevens bill, not because I know that it is the best bill which could be framed, but because I believe it is the best one which has been offered; because it is one step forward in standardization of foods. The chain stores are fooling the people, cutting price upon known goods, and charging exorbitant prices upon ones about which one knows nothing. What the housekeeper wants is that she may have a way of knowing what she is buying. She is willing to pay for the guaranty of a reliable producer. No food should be wasted but it should never be possible to sell a quality of food for anything else than what it is. The standard price must be followed by a true plain label, which will tell the quality or grade and the caloric value of food therein.

Mail Order Houses Caught Lying About Their Goods Always Say "It Was a Mistake"

Mr. Wildey Repeatedly Showed Them Up to Themselves and Got Only Above Explanation. Mail Order Bargains That Were Rank Frauds.

Some weeks ago I had occasion to outline some remarks in connection with a speech I made in New York City and I took this position that if the mail-order houses were compelled to give the values that they claim to be giving, that within six months' time every mail-order house in the land would be bankrupt, and that if they were equal to what they claim, that every retail dealer and jobber in the country would be forced out of business. In other words, my position is simply this, that the catalogue houses ought to be compelled to either advertise what they give or else to give what they advertise.

I am not seeking to work along spectacular lines. It is a plain business proposition. I am acting no differently with my catalogue friends than I would with my competitor in the same town if he were misrepresenting.

Now at our retailers' convention in Minnesota, there was a talk upon the subject, "Where Have Our Profits Gone?" I don't know whether you have heard that talk, but I am going to tell you where your profits have gone. They have gone to the retail mail-order houses in Chicago. Ten millions of dollars of net profits left your community and mine in the last twelve months, and went to the mail-order houses in Chicago. That profit would have been well worth having. What are you doing to get that business? Almost nothing. What are the mail-order houses doing? They are advertising.

I always offer to meet competition. Sometimes the jobber he can't meet the prices of the mail-order houses. If I were a jobber I would never let these letters leave my house. The mail-order houses have been succeeding by a campaign of misrepresentation, deceiving the consumer as to values offered by the local dealer, without creating an unworthy confidence in themselves. Honesty in advertising indicates honesty in manufacture and I submit that dishonesty in advertising indicates dishonesty in merchandise. The mail-order houses have been dishonest, and I fail to see how it could have continued so long without the knowledge of those in authority.

I recently purchased four items from a mail-order house: a pair of shoes worth $3.50. "Our price $2.57"; a pound of tea guaranteed never to be sold for less than 75 cents to a dollar. "Our price 53 cents"; a piece of dry goods "Usually sold at 18 cents. Now sold at less than 17 cents. Our price 12 cents"; another piece of dry goods, "Usual retail price 36 cents. Our price 36 cents." To four pieces of merchandise were laid down before the man in charge of a certain mail-order house, and his attention called to the merchandise.

se and to the catalogue description of it, and he said: "Those shoes are not worth $3.50 at retail, and they are not made of the material which the catalogue description calls for."

A sample of that tea was submitted to the most expert tea buyer in the United States, and he told me that the quality was not as good as 48-cent quality, and better than 42-cent quality, and that it lay between those two prices, or was worth about 45 cents and that the mail-order house paid 50 cents for

I called the matter to the attention of the manager of the mail-order house and he said it was a mistake.

With regard to the goods that usually sold for 18 cents, and never at less than 15 cents. Our price 12 cents," that manager said it was a mistake. The usual retail price of that goods is 12½ cents.

The piece that was sold at 50 cents, "Our price 30 cents," that manager said that was a mistake. The usual retail price of that material is 37½ cents. Four pieces of merchandise selected from the catalogue and on the entire list the only explanation was that it was a mistake.

A few weeks ago I received a catalogue announcing the annual White Goods Sale of one of the catalogue houses. On the first sheet there were eleven items quoted. Seven of them quoted the "Usual Retail Price," which is usually 50 per cent. higher than our catalogue friends are asking. They were offering $1.75 goods at $1.25; $1.25 goods for 74 cents, and so on with the others. Do you wonder that your customers are interested in effecting these enormous savings? And yet almost without exception there is hardly a retail dealer making an effort to counteract this poisonous lying.

Selling Consumers at Wholesale

September, 1, 1915.

Did you ever stop to figure that you use a certain amount of sugar, flour, starch, coffee, tea, canned goods, etc. monthly? Do you realize that by buying a months supply at one time that you save money?

You can easily estimate the quantity of these and other staple items that you consume each month.

Possibly you have gotten into the habit of ordering a cake or a pound or whatever it may be, every day or so, not thinking, that by bulking a months purchase, you could save time, money and telephone calls.

If you will go over the following list and estimate your requirements for September, you will find that you can effect a substantial saving.

Speaking of special sales which have as their object selling a wholesale quantity of goods to consumers at a reduction from the regular rate, above is a copy of a circular gotten out by the Kuhn Co. Wilksburg, Pa., to advertise such a sale. As an example of how other fellow does it, it is worth while.

AFTER you have thoroughly digested the merchandising meat you will find in a copy of "The Business Builder," which we will gladly send you, you will probably proceed with an analysis of your own business needs.

If you will let us mail you our new "Service Chart," a glance will answer the questions you are asking yourself—

¶ Will this service prove effective in the community from which I draw trade for my store?

¶ As a manufacturer will it open the new territory I am after?

WITH THE EDITOR

I can't seem to please Mr. E. A. Whittier, secretary of the American Fair Trade

Friend Whittier
Again.

League, no matter what I do. Almost every one of his weekly bulletins he now devotes to me and my humble expressions on the Stevens bill, which aims to give manufacturers authority to fix the retail selling price of their products.

Last week I wrote an article on "The Bearing of the Kellogg Price-Fixing Decision on the General Price Fixing Law." Mr. Whittier writes that "as to statement of fact the paper mentioned is apparently accurate. As to reasoning and deductions it cannot be criticised." Then he argues that in spite of this the article is dangerous because it generates a "subtle physiological poison," whatever that may be. And that because I occasionally used in it the expression "price-fixing." Mr. Whittier says this is an indelicate term and therefore in using it I must have had some evil motive!

My friend Mr. Whittier is giving a convincing imitation of a fussy old maid who sees in every male figure a possible assailant upon her virtue. What does the Stevens bill aim to do if not to enable manufacturers to fix prices? It has all along been the trouble with some of the advocates of the Stevens bill that they are neither frank nor honest. They hide like this behind words.

The campaign to open public markets in the large cities, which shall be meeting places for producers and consumers, the stalls being usually rented by the city at nominal rent, seems to be growing. It has not struck Philadelphia yet, but in New York it has become especially virulent, and during the present week a new public market, conducted by Vincent Astor, has opened. The direct effect is of course to cut the ground from beneath the recognized middleman.

Public Markets as Competitors of Retailers.

They have a public market in Seattle, Wash., and J. E. Patten, secretary of the Retail Grocers' Association there, writes this about it:—

I wish it was possible to give you some sort of an insight into the way the so-called public markets have demoralized business conditions in Seattle. To give you one little instance of how this works out: The management of one of the markets buys sugar in lots of 1,000 sacks each, distributes this sugar at a net cost to the stall holders, permits them to cut to 20, 21 or 22 pounds per dollar and the management's profit is the sack, which must be returned to them in good shape, so you see to what extent they are going "to get" the legitimate merchant. God forbid that you and your members should be saddled with anything like we have in this town. It certainly is a fright!

When a purely co-operative movement, which because it is co-operative does not need to make a profit, and can moreover reduce its expense to almost nothing, begins to compete with a non-co-operative enterprise under much greater expense as well as the need of profit, a blind man can see the result. If the co-operative movement is properly managed, it can walk all over its antagonist in a very few minutes. If the public wishes the middleman to be walked over and annihilated, well and good; I suppose it has a right to feel that way. But it will most ardently wish the middleman back, if he goes.

Wholesale buyers of sugar are complaining considerably about a new rule of the large refiners: that all orders for sugar received after last Monday, October 11th, would be invoiced at the price at the time of the purchase, irrespective of what the price should be on the day of delivery. This is not absolutely new; the refiners sold sugar that way prior to a few months ago. During the last few months they have taken orders at the price ruling at the time, but if the market was lower when the sugar was delivered, they would invoice at the lower figure and thus give the buyers the benefit of it. Of course if the market was higher at the time of delivery, the buyers paid only the purchase price.

It was generous for the refiners to grant buyers this protection on their sugar purchases, but it was not the best business, for it directly encouraged reckless and inconsiderate buying. So did another habit which the refiners fell into at the same time—of often cancelling orders entirely when the market had declined. All this prevented a buyer from educating himself to form and use judgment of his own. Nothing was to be lost by making a mistake; in fact he could not make a mistake; he landed on his feet no matter what he did. Such a condition was particularly bad for the buyer, for it completely dried up his initiative.

The best business is to make every buyer, large and small, back his own judgment to the limit. He should be compelled to take what he has ordered and to pay for it at the price he agreed to pay. If his judgment in buying is poor, because he has not taken pains to get information, then, after he is stung a few times, he may set about getting more information. This will be better for him and better for everybody.

Much discussion has been and is being bestowed upon nationally advertised products:

An Interesting Illustration of a Rule.

their desirability as merchandise, the profit, generally speaking, that they pay; and whether everything considered it is better for a retailer to push them, or to push unknown brands on which the percentage of profit may be somewhat higher. It is probably almost always true that the percentage of profit on an unknown article is higher than the percentage of profit on a nationally advertised article; it has to be; that is the manufacturer's main argument.

An interesting case in point is transpiring in Philadelphia. Recently a brand of rolled oats has been offered to the trade here. Consumers never heard of it except through one small advertising campaign a year or so ago in the "Saturday Evening Post," done at a time when the manufacturer had not even introduced his product to the trade. Naturally its effect was practically nil.

Later the manufacturer did introduce his brand to the trade. He put out specialty salesmen of his own to canvass retailers, and recently given jobbers a special count in return for which the salesmen are supposed to push his brand. Undoubtedly the brand is in quite a few stores to-day, a result of the work that has been done.

But retailers report that it can't sell it. Consumers don't know of it; it is a strange and untimely brand, offering nothing that well-known brands do not offer; it sells no cheaper than the latter and the result is that it sits on the grocer's shelves and gathers dust and weevils.

How could a manufacturer avoid around this? In either of two ways: He could either make a nationally advertised brand of his own; or he could offer the consumer more for the same money or the same for less money. Offering an unknown brand of superior quality, at an average price, in competition with a nationally advertised brand on about the same terms, is idiotic. It never did and never could get anywhere.

In advertising, the line between good and bad, between pleasant and suggestive

Advertising Cleverness That Cuts Both Ways.

unpleasantly suggestive, is so fine that many an advertiser doesn't see it at all. The result, to a student of advertising, is sometimes funny. For instance, this advertisement of a patent medicine in a Pittsburg daily paper:

INVESTIGATE!

Bulgarian Blood Tea, vitalizing and corrective. A few doses will astonish you. At All Drug Stores.

I have taken many medicines which astonished me on the first dose. But the quality of astonishment was scarcely a recommendation.

This reminds me of other catch phrases, supposedly clever. "The te lingers." "You can't forget taste," and so on. All these both ways, like the sign in the dy-made clothing window, on't go somewhere else to be med; come in here." The users such things always seem to be last people to see this.

Selling Talks With Clerks

BY A MAN WHO HAS BEEN ONE

Conducted by W. E. SWEENEY, Manager for L. Lehman & Co.'s
Department Food Store, Dover, N. J.

Extracts from a Personal Talk.—

I have asked you to remain a few minutes to-night so that some little and big things may be talked over as we enter upon our fall business.

Fall business is an awakening business with us. It means an introduction of new season's goods, and to a very large extent a new arrangement of prices.

You have already been instructed in the advance on tomatoes, dried peas, beans, potatoes, Swiss cheese, eggs, butter, etc. It is up to you to emphasize the fact that market conditions are entirely beyond our control and that the situation often finds us on the losing side of the fence.

This season of the year suggests new and more elaborate displays, especially that of canned goods. One of you remarked that peaches will be out of it because of the late bumper crop and the advantage taken by so many women to do home preserving. While this condition may effect the usual early demand, yet experience proves that on the whole the difference will be very slight.

I want to impress upon you the everlasting importance of bringing intelligence and tact into salesmanship—for that really is salesmanship.

An illustration happened to-day. A man came into our store to spend some like $30 or $35, he ran a country hotel and had incidentally about 20 steady boarders who paid him, as he said, only $6 a week for board and room. That of itself should have been a pretty good basis to figure on. And it was, because we got his order. But not without a lot of argument. He had a quotation of 75 cents on peas, for instance, and while this price could not be met on regular Junes, we explained that his price represented soaks and that it would be cheaper for him to buy dried peas and do his own soaking, but immensely better for his business in the end to pay us 25 cents a dozen more and get real canned peas.

The important thing is to be prepared to handle a customer of that kind. He very candidly, and I think very sensibly, stated what he was getting for his goods. He gave us a good basis to work on. You wouldn't recommend fancy creamery butter to such a buyer, nor would you show him our 38-cent coffee.

However, in dealing with the regular retail trade we must not always allow personal appearance to govern our line of talk. People must be felt out. It's easy enough to lose a sale by offering 29-cent tea to an apparently "poor" woman who drinks Golden Tip Ceylon. You must always endeavor to avoid the hurry-up spirit with a customer. It's a bad habit, and the customer catches the spirit very quickly. You give it unconsciously, and I don't know but it is often so received.

Complaints have come to us about long waiting, but long waiting may always be cut short by the "spoken word" and the proffered chair. My, what a lot there is in this action. Surely a business is largely built up by attention to niceties.

Let ours be a home store and let us be imbued with the home spirit, giving a real welcome to our friends as we do when we open to them the front door of our own home.

Avoid the too common and utterly cheap talk about people paying exorbitant prices for nationally advertised goods. By doing so you contribute largely to that national advertising.

Qualify "our own" brands first, of course, but never discredit established ones.

Keep mum about your competitors. Whatever reliable information you get about them, let it be given to your manager.

OUR NEW DEPARTURE IN ADVERTISING

THE OCTOBER LETTER—To Progressive, Experienced, Well-Principled Grocers

Our Good Friends:—

In our September Letter we took a stab or two at the great question of ADVERTISING, just touching it here and there. Last July Ye Editor was invited to auto from Albany to New Bedford, and having Advertising in his mind, what he saw by the wayside led him to realize anew the fundamental simplicity of this science at first hand. His eye caught these placards:—

FOR SALE

PIGS FOR SALE

EATING PLACE

(1). Passing a farmer's home, a horse hay-rake had been rolled on the lawn. On the seat a box cover placard told the story in rough letters, "For Sale." This was simplicity itself in advertising, more effective with any passer-by needing a hay-rake, than a whole page ad. in the Town's Paper.

(2.) Nailed to a cherry-tree farther on he read again, "Pigs for Sale."

These were on a State of Massachusetts Highway, with autos by the hundreds passing.

(3). A neat cottage, under over-hanging trees, announced itself as a Country Restaurant thus—"Eating Place."

(4). As we flew along, on a house corner we saw, "Piano for Sale" most effective and direct, certainly, recalling an ad., in a Boston Paper seven years ago: "Grand Piano for Sale, by a Lady with Turned Rosewood Legs." Here was an element of ambiguity about the Lady which provoked a smile, but still was it not a shot in the bull's eye as an ad?

(5). Another Home Restaurant by the way announced in the same fashion, "Fresh Cooked Chickens and Fixins," while later a more artistic sign in the shape and lettering, informed us that here was the "Maplewood Tea Room."

PIANO FOR SALE

FRESH COOKED CHICKEN AND FIXINS

MAPLEWOOD TEA ROOM

Many farmers made such announcements as these:—

APPLES

MAN WANTED

Now here in seed was displayed the whole science and practice of ADVERTISING. Enlarge, illuminate, change the agent of presentation and display as much as you will, to win the attention of probable buyers to what you have to sell is the thing. Are we not right? But let us not simply follow our people. Is it honorable to be a "copy cat," or to use methods that tend to demoralize trade, demoralize your own customers, and thus ultimately demoralize your own business?

Some practical questions:

No. 1.—"I can't trace definite returns from my Newspaper Advertising. I have been doing it on general principles because they say 'Advertising pays' and because others do it. Every Dollar is a clean slice of hard cash from my net profit and it galls me to be uncertain about its effectiveness. How can I test the value of my Newspaper Ads?"

Suggestion A—Suppose you change the form of your Ads as to matter and space; try "Item" insertions instead of "Broad-sides;" and have them appear in different parts of your Papers. If you catch the eye and interest of the Housekeeper in one Specialty of yours, have you not "Struck a fish?"

Suggestion B—Suppose you try leaving out every other Ad for a bit, and watch results—see if your Trade in any wise shows a loss.

No. 2.—"I have been mailing weekly postal cards, etc. When I began they seemed to bring business, but now I doubt their value. What can I say you to say about this?"

Suggestion A—We must remember the world is full of Advertising by mail. Ye Editor opened twenty-three letters, etc., one evening last week at his home, and eighteen of these were promptly thrown in the waste-basket; they were of no interest to him. But such Ads not only failed of helpful influence for the Advertiser, but left a sense of disgust with me. Can this pay?

Suggestion B—Don't do things AS or BECAUSE others do them. If you haven't anything "fetching" to say, don't say it; but don't fall back on the crowd.

IN WRITING TO ADVERTISERS KINDLY MENTION "MODERN MERCHANT AND GROCERY WORLD"

exploiting "Cut Prices;" that is a damnable way of doing business. Leave it to the "other fellow," if he will, and let him reap his ultimate reward. "For ye have sown the wind and they shall reap the whirlwind."

LORD & TAYLOR, FIFTH AVENUE.

But Ye Editor asks you, Fellow Merchant, are you making the most of your own store as a center of advertising influence? Are your windows and display shelves neat, attractive and "catchy" to the eye? Don't overlook this Display! Many windows are overloaded with scores or hundreds of individual articles—a few, or even one, attractive centerpiece may prove better than a thousand where their very numbers and incongruity confuse the passer-by and give no definite impression. The biggest brain thinks only one thought at a time, though it may go like lightning from thought to thought.

Some of our finest stores on Fifth Avenue, with immense show windows, costing thousands of dollars, specially use them for all night advertising, with brilliant electric light. Ye Editor has been staying during the summer midweeks at the Union League Club, and has watched with interest this system of advertising. He has noticed how the sidewalk crowds (who seem to have more leisure in the evening than through the busy day) turn their eyes to these bright windows and many stop to study them in detail. We take pleasure in having the Kodak snapped by way of illustration. You will see that the rule is to display only a few notable articles; at first this might appear a waste of space, but on second thought if each eye is attracted by a single object and interested in the store that offers it, has not the scheme worked well? You will notice these Display Artists have studied human nature and learned that one clear winsome perception, sticking in the memory, is better advertising than ten thousand confused impressions, which leave only hazy memories.

FRANKLIN, SIMONS & CO., FIFTH AVENUE.

THE BEDELL CO., WEST 14th STREET.

Are you using your own windows, then, day and night, without one penny's additional cost to yourself for ground rent, so they give you your most economical effective advertising? Notice the reproductions our artist has prepared for you from notable stores which draw trade from all over our Country.

Ye Editor saw a striking window display of costly Furs in restricted variety, most attractively arranged in the great store of B. Altman & Company. It was when our Kodak Man went there one evening to reproduce it for you, all those huge windows were tightly closed with steel shutters. May not these notable Merchants ask themselves the question whether their firm can afford to "bottle up" these magnificent opportunities for Displays most likely to win Buyers? Would not two windows on each corner of their palatial block blaze their story with telling effect on the evening crowd at the mere cost of arrangement and electricity?

The fact that leading stores through the Country are utilizing their windows counts for much. By way of contrast Ye Editor presents an illustration of the other extreme from a modest country town. The largest family market at a Seaside Resort bought and prepared to rebuild for the next season the store adjoining their present location, and all the members were interested in telling their Lady Customers of the plans for 1916. This is a little Parish with less than a thousand winter residents, but twenty-five or thirty thousand people gather there in the summertime. Now, the store next door soon to be refitted, has been used all summer as an overflow storage place—the windows shockingly dirty and filled with fly stained and faded brown paper signs from a former occupant. Altogether, its appearance was disgusting and must have left a feeling of aversion with all passers-by. Our Artist shows you just how it looks.

Now, suppose these people had said: "We have a chance to do good advertising at a few dollars cost this summer, that will tell for next year" and had taken the matter in hand in accordance with the suggestions of our Artist, in his second presentation of the same property. All summer long the building with climbing vines and flowering plants in the windows, and a clear-cut announcement overhead, the glass and paint clean and glistening, would have done credit to the firm and paved the way for increasing interest on the part of its patrons next season. Do not these two pictures speak for themselves and enforce the lesson? However much the Merchant may pay in cash to outsiders to advertise his wares for him, can he afford to miss using to the utmost his own facilities that even at moderate cost will win best results?

Any Horse-Sense in these advertising suggestions for our October Letter which may help us both to more efficient and less wasteful Advertising? closing word about our "Life Work." Do you see the chance to play "That Ferris Irresistible Flavor" as a trump card in your own business? We are for only one Grocer in ten as they run. He is apt to be the true Merchant of the lot. So we want YOU. We are dead sure that uniformly fine quality in eatables brings the energetic Grocer in the long run—

- 1st—Trade that stands by.
- 2nd—Reputation that begets confidence.
- 3rd—Profits that net a worthy reward, and
- 4th—A Self-respect worth while.

Do not fool with the Ferris Trade Marks. They are worth much or nothing. Please let them alone or use them for all they are worth. Is it that Horse-Sense, too? We will work loyally with you when you mean business and say the word.

Cream of Wheat Case Argued on Appeal. Housewives League in Controversy Over President's Too Ready Recommendation of Food Products. Interesting Freight Decision in Local Commission Merchants Case. Market Summary.

Special Correspondence of "Modern Merchant and Grocery World."

New York, October 15, 1915.

The Cream of Wheat case was argued on appeal in the United States Circuit Court of Appeals last Wednesday. Readers hereof will remember that the Great Atlantic and Pacific Tea Co. sued the Cream of Wheat Co., claiming that the latter company was acting in violation of the Sherman Act because it cut the Tea Company off its own selling list and also asked its customers not to sell it. This because the Tea Company had cut the price of Cream of Wheat from 4 cents to 12 cents in its Economy stores. The lower court decided that the Cream of Wheat Co. had acted within its rights in cutting off the Tea Company and refused an injunction.

The Tea Company appealed and the argument on the appeal was heard on Wednesday. The main points in the argument of counsel for the Tea Company were as follows:—

An attempt by the vendor of an article to fix the price at which it shall be resold is an attempted restraint upon alienation, obnoxious to the public policy and void.

The seller of an article on an absolute sale, whether the article be an ordinary or unpatented article, or be produced by a secret process covered by patents or protected by copyright, cannot impose any restraint upon the further alienation thereof, "because," as Lord Coke puts it, "this whole interest and property is out of him so as he hath no possibility of reverter; and it is against trade and traffic and bargaining and contracting between man and man."

All such attempts are void and unenforceable at common law and, when they take the form of contracts, combinations or conspiracies affecting interstate commerce, are prohibited by the Sherman law.

Defendant's scheme for maintaining uniform resale prices is violative also of the second section of the Sherman anti-trust law because it produces an unlawful monopoly in Cream of Wheat by confining the trade thereof to those who maintain a resale price and excludes all other therefrom.

The damages to the plaintiff from the defendant's violation of the Sherman law are of the character known as irreparable, and a preliminary injunction, under Section 16 of the Clayton act, should issue to restrain the defendant from enforcing and carrying out its aforesaid plan or system of sales.

Under well settled principles, the complainant is unquestionably entitled to a preliminary injunction, compelling defendant to discontinue its blacklisting letters, by which it prevents or seeks to prevent complainant from obtaining a supply of Cream of Wheat.

The Housewives' League, which is an organization of women who think they know better than retail grocers how the grocery business should be run, is in considerable of a controversy over some of the practices of Mrs. Julian Heath, the president. It seems that Mrs. Heath recommended and indorsed in various public ways certain food products on behalf of the league. The manufacturers of the products in question have made widespread use of the indorsements in their advertising and the members of the league which object to this sort of thing claim that the league is being degraded and commercialized. There is some talk that Mrs. Heath has been influenced in her recommendations by the giving of advertising to the Housewives' League magazine.

W. H. Howe, whose home is in Kansas City, and who acted as organizer for the National Retail Grocers' Association last year, has been appointed secretary of the Newark (N. J.) Retail Grocers' Association. He will work to build up the local association and also to strengthen the New Jersey State Association. In addition to this, if he has time, he will work in

When you sell an advertised article, and the article proves the truth of all that's said in the advertising, it helps you.

National Biscuit Company products make for good trade and good will, because they back up, in every particular, all that is said of their high quality and goodness. These famous crackers and cookies, wafers and snaps, are national favorites, in constant demand. Hence, they are the most profitable line a grocer can sell.

If you do not know this is so, prove it by stocking with a good assortment of In-er-seal Trade Mark packages.

pany delivered to Titus Brothers 43,080 pounds of peaches. The freight charges, according to the official schedules, were $491.45, but through some mistake the railroad company rendered a bill for $488, which they paid. They sold the peaches and remitted to their principals, thus closing the transaction. At this juncture the railroad company sent them a balance bill for $3.45, stating that the former one had been incorrect. Titus Brothers refused to pay on the ground that they had remitted the proceeds of the sale and had no money out of which to pay. The railroad, they said, should go after the shipper. The railroad began suit in New York against Titus Brothers and the case has been pending all this time. The decision is that Titus Brothers must pay, in spite of all the reasonable arguments which they raised in their defense.

SUMMARIZED MARKET CONDITIONS.

Tea in fair request. Market unchanged and steady. India-Ceylons firm.—Coffee in light demand. Prices about unchanged except for milds, which are a shade higher for the week on larger European demand.—Sugar weaker, both raw and refined, all refiners asking 4.90 for granulated, except the Federal, whose price is 4 cents. Raws a shade weaker for the week.—Spot prunes higher on account of scarcity and in good demand, all receipts being absorbed at top prices. Coast price for new prunes unchanged. Apricots strong and higher. Other dried fruits unchanged for the week. Currants very firm and high.—Tomatoes show easier feeling and some sales were made at 85 cents in a large way for Maryland 3s, some packers holding for 90 cents. Other canned goods unchanged. Maine corn scarce and firm. Wheat irregular with a somewhat easier feeling. Flour fairly active at about unchanged prices.

Pennsylvania Organization Notes.

The Bethlehem Association is moving forward rapidly. A large increase of membership is reported. Mr. Smedley will address the organization on November 16th.

The Johnstown Association is planning a food show, to be held in February, 1916. This should be a splendid opportunity for manufacturers to demonstrate and introduce their products. Johnstown is a live, hustling city and is a large consumer of food products. Write for space to George L. McGarry, secretary, Johnstown.

The Bradford Association is already making plans for the next convention. This is an unusually active organization and is always on the job.

Plans are in working shape for a new street lighting system and a movement is on foot for a new public park. The association will assist in the annual Mardi Gras festival on October 30th.

Plans are also being worked out for a trade extension campaign.

Allentown merchants listened to a splendid address "Co-operation," by its president, Irvin B. Shelling, on October 11th. There was a large attendance.

Mr. Smedley has arranged to address the following associations: Plymouth, St. Clair, Ashland, Indiana, Kittanning, Bethlehem, Bellwood.

Wellsboro has invited the Organizer to be present at a banquet called for the purpose of organizing the merchants.

A district or county convention of merchants and commercial men will be held at Washington, Pa., on October 21st. The Washington Board of Trade is the father of the movement. The object is to bring commercial interests together for the purpose of organizing them into a cohesive unit in order that their interests may be conserved and their influence felt in demanding necessary mercantile legislation.

The Kittanning Association has succeeded in securing the co-operation of Ford City merchants in an early closing movement. This means that instead of closing at 8.30 to 9 P. M., stores will close at 6 P. M. This association has done a lot for the public good, hence its popularity with the people of Armstrong County.

The Philadelphia Association is adding new members at each meeting. There is no doubt but this organization will number 1,000 members by January 1st. President Kaiser and Secretary Schoch are working hard and intelligently toward this result.

The Ashland Association is working out a comprehensive credit and collection system.

The Committee on Pennsylvania has about completed its labor and the report will be published in the next issue of the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World."

E. W. Heffner, of Lock Haven, a guest of honor at a banquet tendered Governor Brumbaugh at State College last week. Mr. Heffner is a prominent candidate for the office of Public Service Commissioner and his friends over the State are doing all in their power to help him. What a splendid thing it would be to have such a splendid man as Heffner in this office.

If organization is power, why organize? A good mercantile association is an asset to any city or town. Organize. Can we help you?

A Good Profit.

Aunt Jemima offers the retailer an active seller and a good profit.

Ninety cents a dozen is the price to the retail trade for a 10 cent seller. That's what the grocers and that's what Aunt Jemima get them. Not only that, but the are made to move fast by heavy advertising. Then also Aunt Jemima has been made better than ever year because powdered milk has been added to the goods, and now the is—Made in a minute, the Milk's in it.—Advt.

The Week's One-Time Ads.

Some of the bulkiest stuff I ever read on advertising is in this week's Ferris ad. The fellow that writes those ads. is sure some human philosopher. He sees through most everything, and it must be a great stunt to sit down in his sitting room some night and listen to him talk about anything that comes up. Anybody who does advertising, but isn't satisfied he knows how, and thinks maybe if he knew more, he could make his advertising pull better, ought to read this Ferris ad.

through four times. It's strong meat for him. Better the stuff about making your "a center of advertising influence" five times—that gets right at the bottom of the whole thing strikes me that's what the people have done with their advertising of Ferris Hams and Bacon. It has always preached quality never talked price, except to people that the price was higher than ordinary Ham and Bacon.

JIMMY MANDER

The Grocery Markets

Sugar.

sugar market appears to be a weaker for the week. Some of finers early in the week were asked for granulated, but at this all will accept business at 4.90. Buying has been rather brisk but it has come to a standstill the easier feeling. Raws are also. The price got as high as 4.13 but it declined again and can now be noted around 4.01 cents. Michigan and Ohio beet granulated are being sold in the central territory at 4.75 and in eastern territory at 4.80.

Coffee.

coffee market is doing a little better. Rio and Santos are perhaps a higher than a week ago and milds on a 1/4 to 1/2 cent higher. The reason for the advance in milds is that there is a heavy buyer of those grades in Brazil. The reason for the better feeling in Brazil is that buyers seem to be taking coffees more freely. There is a reasonable probability of any revolutionary change in prices, but the situation is undoubtedly better. Java unchanged and firm. Mocha is perhaps a 1/2 cent lower, because some Mocha has gotten in.

Tea.

The tea market shows no change for the week. The market for Congous has closed, as has the market for Japans, and the Formosa market will close in the near future. This means that the status of these teas is now fixed for the season and the low prices which some buyers expected have not materialized, and probably will not materialize. The entire tea market is steady to firm, with a good demand.

Syrup and Molasses.

Glucose is unchanged for the week. Compound syrup is steady, though unchanged for the week. The demand is fair. Sugar syrup is steady to firm at unchanged prices. Demand quiet. Molasses shows no change and no great activity.

Fish.

The mackerel situation is still very firm. There are some Norways on spot, but they are held at very high prices and the demand for them is quite small. Practically no fish is coming forward from Norway, either new or old. The entire situation has a very strong outlook. Cod, hake and haddock are unchanged and quiet. Some demand has developed. Domestic sardines are dull and unchanged on the recently reported low basis of price. Imported sardines show no change and quiet demand. Salmon is about where it was a week ago, new pink salmon being steady at about 70 cents in a large way, f. o. b.

Canned Goods.

There is no change in any line of canned goods for the week. Tomatoes are still firm, some sales of Maryland 3s standard having been made at 90 cents in a large way, f. o. b. The demand is fair. Corn shows no change for the week, the situation being still rather firm. Peas comparatively dull and still heavy. Apples unchanged and quiet. California canned goods are dull in first hands, as futures are now being delivered. Prices show no change. Small Eastern staple canned goods are unchanged and dull.

Dried Fruits.

Prunes on spot are still very high by reason of the short spot stock. The slide in the Panama Canal has very greatly deranged shipments of all California products, but the owners of the merchandise en route are transshipping them largely by way of the Horn. It will make continued scarcity for a while on spot until the supplies begin to come in. Spot prunes are about a cent above the coast price on account of scarcity. Peaches show no change and quiet demand. Apricots continue firm. Raisins are unchanged and in moderate request. Currants continue very high, the price at this writing being 11 1/2 cents in cartons in a large way. This is about 3 cents above normal.

Beans and Peas.

Pea beans have made another advance, and the situation is very high. Sales were made during the week at $3.75 per bushel in a large way. The reason for the high prices is not the scarcity of beans, but the fact that the new crop cannot be threshed on account of unfavorable weather. Plenty of beans are available, however, and as soon as the weather settles supplies will increase and the prices probably decline. Marrows show no change and light demand on account of high prices. California limas are a shade higher to come forward, although the spot price is unchanged. Green and Scotch peas, by reason of scarcity, are about 25 cents per bushel higher.

Butter.

The butter market shows an active consumptive demand. Receipts are about normal for the season and the situation is healthy on the present basis. No immediate change seems in sight.

Eggs.

Eggs are bringing satisfactory prices on the same basis as a week ago. There is a slight falling off in the consumptive demand, no doubt due to the extreme price. Some storage eggs are coming out at prices which show the holders a very fair profit. Prices of storage eggs are about where they were a week ago.

Provisions.

All smoked meats show an advance from $\frac{1}{4}$ to $\frac{1}{2}$ cent and the situation is firm at the higher prices. The consumptive demand is normal. The advance in provisions is most unusual for this season. Pure and compound lard are also higher by about a $\frac{1}{2}$ cent per pound, due to short supply. Barreled pork and canned meats are all unchanged and steady.

Cheese.

The cheese market is steady and unchanged, with a normal consumptive demand. Stocks are reported heavier than usual, but the situation is fairly healthy under the circumstances.

INDIVIDUAL MARKET REPORTS.

Standard Canned Goods.

If there was any chance at all for the tomato crop to come back during October, it has been killed off by the continued wet weather and low temperature since the first of the month. In any ordinary season every tomato cannery in this section is at work full blast during the first half of October, and in some seasons until the end of the month, with an overflow of the fruit in November, when the killing frosts come later than usual. The weather and, consequently, the crop conditions throughout the entire season have been so very unfavorable that there were ten or more days' work lost in the beginning of the canning season. At the end, the season closed at least two weeks earlier than usual. The few tomatoes that may be still gathered here and there are being shipped to Baltimore and sold to the city canners at $1 per bushel, against an average price of, say, 40 cents in ordinary times. This means a factory cost of about 95 cents a dozen, or more, according to the yield of filled cans per bushel, which forcibly illustrates the confidence of the packers that high prices have come to stay.

There was steady buying of tomatoes during the week, without any unusual activity or speculation, and the goods were as widely scattered as they were last week. This is the best character of buying when such conditions prevail, for the goods are wanted for actual trade requirements, not to be stored for speculative purposes and put out later on at higher prices. The warehouses here that make a specialty of storing canned goods are usually overcrowded at this time of the season, especially with tomatoes, but this is not the case this year. The transportation lines report increased tonnage out of this section. While the prices did not advance over those of the week previous, they did stiffen up a bit all along the line, and any increase in the buying will, it is believed, cause an advance from today's quotations.

For the other lines of vegetables there was more activity in a few special lines, for instance, in spinach, which is almost sure to advance in prices because the fall crop is light and the quality is superior; in sweet potatoes because the quotations for the new pack started at prices lower than usual, and in lima beans for the same reason. For the highest quality of shoepeg Maine style corn because the pack those grades has been sold to a large extent than usual, and now nearly closed out, and for the cheaper grade of corn because the price is attractive. String beans and wax beans have improved by the latest methods of sorting and canning them, and the buyers are showing their appreciation by buying them. Other items of vegetables are being purchased in small lots, which gradually wears away stocks without being noticed, and without causing any advance in the quotations.

Canned fruits are being neglected at least for the time being, but they have their innings by and by. Blight in the pear crop this summer cause a smaller pack this season, apples are not over-abundant. Unripe peaches and seconds table peaches are in fair demand, but they will come in by and by.

We are reliably informed that the market for raw oysters for canning purposes is very likely to be stronger a higher cost this fall and winter cause the spawning conditions during the past summer were unfavorable. This is in line with our previous reports. It may be well to look for cove oysters now.

CHARLES B. KNOX COMPANY, Inc. : Johnstown, New York

Windows That Couldn't Make a Fish's Mouth Water.

You fellows in the country can teach the city fellows a lot about some things.

Particularly about fixing up windows.

Some time ago I made some wise remarks about window displays that went too far; here's something I've seen myself of displays that didn't go far enough.

Didn't go anywhere, in fact.

I worked about two weeks in Philadelphia last month, and when I started out I made up my mind I'd keep my eyes open to see what was doing in the way of windows here. I'd already had experience in the country, and I tell you there wasn't any comparison. Understand, some of the country store displays show up pretty tacky, but their windows have something in 'em. Usually, anyway. The city windows often didn't have anything in.

You'd hardly believe, would you, that a grocer wouldn't keep his window pushing for him all the time. You see there's nothing to our business but appetite. People don't have to have anything but a very few things. With most of the stuff it's a case of making 'em want it or they don't get it. Don't get as much, anyway. Ain't that right? So that it's up to you to make 'em want to eat it, and if you don't do that somehow or other, why there's nothing doing.

Nothing's in it for a minute with a good window to make people want to eat. That's what makes it so strange that these city fellows pay no attention to it. I don't mean all of 'em, but a heap more than you'd think.

I stopped in front of a store on Allegheny avenue one day last week. It wasn't any one-horse store—it was a live stand and had a couple of good bulk windows. What was in 'em to make my mouth water? Well, I'll tell you what was in 'em—in one there was a chaste assortment of fly specked laundry soap, and in the other there was an attractive pile of empty Quaker Oats cartons—the big display kind.

Did my mouth water? Answer, no! Actually I stood there and got so mad thinking the owner would be such a plumb idiot that all the water that I had on hand dried up.

I didn't have to go in the place on business, but I did go in, more out of curiosity than anything else. I wanted to see whether the store was kept by a blind man.

A woman was behind the counter—the proprietor's wife she looked like. I bought a nickel's worth of cakes and while she was getting me fixed up her husband came in. That is I suppose it was her husband. I may be marrying a couple that oughtn't to go together at all.

We hit up a little conversation, and finally I got around to how business was.

"Well, not so good," he said. "Better than a year ago, though."

"You've got two good windows here," I said, "and a good live neighborhood. Seems like you ought to get some business out of window trims."

"Oh, I don't have time to bother with the windows," he said. "Ain't worth the time it takes anyway."

Well, I delivered to that amiable gentleman then a lecture such as he never heard before on what a decent window can do for a grocery business. I'll bet I talked for fifteen minutes straight. His wife listened to every word, too. Clever woman.

"It's all right," he said, "if you've got the time, but I ain't."

Which is what the butter-in usually gets for his labor.

That same day I saw four other windows with almost nothing in either. What are these fellows thinking of, anyway? Seems like they must have some idea that old soap and cartons make a nice, neat modest display, and that anything more would be ungeminemly.

Where that ain't the reason, it must be laziness; I can't think of anybody really thinking it was good business to use windows that way.

Honest, I'd rather have a window display of refined bugs; they'd at least show there was some life in the place.

Speaking of how window displays get business, I'll bet my own wife has dragged me into store forty times to buy something I saw in the window. Last time was only yesterday, give you my word. It was twenty squares from where I live; I'd never seen the store before. There was a pile of maple sugar in the window marked six cents a block.

My wife made one of those delicate little hints of hers. Like this: "Wait, I want some of that maple sugar. Go in and get it." I mused by thinking hard, to understand what she meant, and dropped my little 28 for a slab of sugar. Good stuff, too. While in the store she asked me before the clerk she could have a pound of chocolate, and I, gnashing my teeth because I couldn't say no without looking stingy, had to let her have 'em.

Sixty-eight cents that window display cost me.

THE STROLLER

Possible Cases Under New Pennsylvania Workmen's Compensation Act

Becomes Operative Next January 1st, and Makes all Retail Merchants Within the State Liable for Accidents to Their Employees While Latter are at Work.

[Inasmuch as the new Pennsylvania Workmen's Compensation Law which becomes operative next January 1st, affects every grocer and general storekeeper within the State, the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" will publish from time to time some possible cases which may arise under it, in the experience of the average grocer or general storekeeper. A full digest of the act was published in the issue of July 26th last. Readers hereof will remember that it practically makes it compulsory for employers to pay damages to employees who meet with accidents in the course of their regular work.—Ed.]

Possible Case No. 4.

Smith & Jones, general storekeepers and grocers, have a small sausage and scrapple making plant in connection with their business. Among the clerks they employ are Thomas Brown and William Jackson. These clerks do anything about the store, making sausage and scrapple whenever it is their turn.

Both of the above clerks are great practical jokers, especially where each other were concerned. One day when Brown was to make sausage, Jackson loosened the pulley on the overhead shaft so it would not hold. Brown stood on the floor below, looking up at it to see what the trouble was, when the heavy double pulley fell directly on his head, making him unconscious and fracturing his skull. He lay after being confined to his bed a considerable time. Before he recovered the real cause of the accident came known.

Mrs. Brown made claim against Smith & Jones under the Pennsylvania Workmen's Compensation Act. The law would not be liable because the act distinctly provides that an employer shall not be liable for accidents to employees which were caused by the "intentional or wanton" acts of third persons. Neither Smith & Jones, or Brown himself, were liable; the fault was entirely that of the practical joker, Jackson. Jackson alone would be responsible.

Burk's Fresh Sausage

Composed entirely of selected tender pieces of pork, not the ordinary trimmings commonly used. Not cheapened in price and quality by the addition of tripe, boiled rice and sundry substitutes. Correctly seasoned, not offensive to sensitive stomachs because of pungent herbs. Nutritious. In four styles—hashed fine and coarse, linked and in straight casings.

Burk's Philadelphia Scrapple

Prepared from the very best materials—good, wholesome meats and extra fine corn meal. Well boiled and seasoned to suit the most critical. Not to be compared with some cheap products of doubtful hues and colors. Burk's eats as good as it looks. Superior to farmers' products. In pans of 15 pounds each.

Burk's Pig Soupe

is a seasonable specialty prepared fresh daily, in pans of five pounds each. The jelly is clear and transparent and free from vegetable gelatines and ill-smelling glue stock. Contains plenty of meat and garnished with slices of lemon and parsley.

Proves attractive when turned out of the pan, and is a quick seller, saving the consumer the trouble of cooking pig's feet, so difficult to obtain at this season of the year.

Burk's Liver Pudding

Of the usual "Burk" standard—clean and unadulterated. Rich in quality and an excellent dish when fried, or, after removing the casing, hashed with potatoes. In rings of 1 pound each.

333.—The Predicament of a Man Who Forgot One Thing When He Sold His Business.

This rather unfortunate but interesting case comes to me from Cincinnati, Ohio:—

Before paying over nearly a thousand dollars which a certain firm of this city are claiming I owe them, I should like to get your opinion on the matter. I have read your regular articles ever since they first commenced, and believe my problem is in your line.

I conducted a wholesale and retail business at the above address here until the first of last January. The firm name was Carter & Co., the Carter in the firm being myself. There was no company; I adopted that name because I liked it better. The business was conducted in that way for about 12 years. On January 1st last I sold out to a new firm, composed of three men who had been associated with me. One of them was named Carter and the others bore different names.

When I sold out I told a few people about it, but as the name was the same did not think it necessary to stir up anything by public report of the change. As it appears, the three men who bought me out did not have enough capital to run the business as it should be run and they are in trouble. They owe a Chicago house about $1,000, which they cannot pay, and they are talking suit. In the suit they say they will bring me in because they never knew I was out of the business, and always supposed I was still in it. I see no reason why I should pay debts of somebody else. The name was not changed, but one of the new partners is named Carter and has a right to use his own name. I can't believe that they can collect anything from me, but will be glad to hear what you have to say.

JAMES R. CARTER.

This is not an unusual case. Men who buy an established business, with a well-known name, prefer as a rule—as they have everything to gain by it—that the name be left unchanged and that the public remain under the impression that the same blood is in the business. Therefore whenever they can prevail on the former owner to do that, they do it, but he is an exceedingly foolish man if he agrees, for it leaves him just as liable for the debts of the business as he ever was. The books are full of such cases and they have all been decided in the same way, unless there were some facts to take them out of the rule.

There are no facts in my Cincinnati correspondent's report of his case to take it out of the rule. If the Chicago house is not one of the "few people" that he told, he is undoubtedly liable for the $1,000 debt, and also for every other which was incurred on the strength of the belief that he was still in the business.

I quote from the decision of the court in a well-known case, the point being the identical one under discussion:—

It may be regarded as well settled that when an ostensible or known member of a copartnership retires therefrom, and wishes to shield himself from liability for future debts of the firm, it is necessary that personal notice of his withdrawal be given to all who have had dealings with the firm, and that notice be given by publication or otherwise, to all others.

The defendant was liable to all persons, knowing his former ownership of the business, who extended credit to the firm after the transfer of the business without public or personal notice of his withdrawal therefrom, although they had not transacted business with the firm before. It follows, therefore, that the plaintiff was entitled to recover the amount of his claim.

The correspondent's fatal shortcoming is that he failed to give public notice to the world when he parted with the business. If he had done that, he would not now be responsible for these debts, even if those who sought to hold him liable had not seen the notice and actually knew nothing of his withdrawal.

In a very few words I can give a safe rule for withdrawing from a partnership or—if you are the sole owner—selling the business to others. A very careful list of all of the firm's creditors should be made. Not only those then selling to the firm, but those in the habit of occasionally selling to it. I repeat that this list should be compiled with the utmost care, for if the name of one creditor is omitted, and he fails to get the notice, he may have a claim against the retiring owner or partner, particularly if the business is going to go on under the same name.

A clear announcement of the withdrawal or the sale should then be sent to every name on the list, in envelopes printed on the outside so they will either be delivered or returned.

In addition to this special notice, a general notice must also be given to the general public by advertising the withdrawal or the sale in newspapers. Usually there is rule as to how much advertising needs to be done—the law men requires that it should be reasonable notice. In ordinary cases of a week for four weeks in papers would be sufficient, if it in a city. If in a country where there are fewer papers, paper would probably be enough.

The theory which the law on in these cases is thoroughly—that a man who has given credit to a firm in the belief John Jones—who was honest responsible—was a member ought to be told when Jones ce to be a member of it, so that he exercise his judgment as to who he will go on selling it.

Weekly Window Display Suggestions

Harvest Display.

This harvest display suggestion can be adapted to suit any grocer's. Heap a large, shallow bottomed basket with all kinds of fruit. The strips of paper are arranged alternately red and brown, to suggest autumn. Cover the bottom of the window with either color. Form the letters of the word "Harvest" with ears of corn, tacking to the window through the ends of the husks.

If a large basket is not obtainable, one can be made in the following manner: Use a picnic cheese box with lid nailed on. Around the edge of the box place inch-high blocks of wood. From the center of the box slant long strips of wood, nailing them to the center and to the blocks around the edge of the box. These will form a very shallow basin, as it were. Cover the bottom with straw, binding flat with yellow cord. Bind the wire handle in the same way, with the addition of a small sheaf of grain at each side. Lay straw on the inside of the basket to prevent fruit from falling through.

Failures in Most Lines Now Less Than Same Month of 1914.

Tide Has Begun to Turn. Only Few Lines Showed More Failures in September, 1915, Than in September, 1914.

The tide has turned in business failures, apparently. The report for the month of September shows that in most lines there were fewer failures than in September, 1914. Of course September, 1914, was the first month after the war began, but the effect had not yet caused much business trouble.

The figures are as follows:—

General Stores.—September, 1915, 125; liabilities, $822,255; September, 1914, 115; liabilities, $719,081.

Groceries.—September, 1915, 247; liabilities, $1,265,716; September, 1914, 287; liabilities, $1,317,441.

Clothing.—September, 1915, 102; liabilities, $727,280; September, 1914, 127; liabilities, $1,157,649.

Dry Goods.—September, 1915, 65; liabilities, $507,565; September, 1914, $572,514.

Shoes.—September, 1915, 33; liabilities, $231,331; September, 1914, 34; liabilities, $939,504.

When a Specialty Order is Cancelled.

The Chicago Auxiliary of the American Specialty Manufacturers' Association has issued a letter to the retail trade of that section which contains a very striking summary of the trouble a jobber must go to when a retailer cancels a specialty orders which he has signed, same to be delivered through some named jobber. This summary is as follows:—

TO THE RETAIL GROCER.

To cancel an order bearing this stamp and signed by the retailer causes annoyance and expense to us and loss to the manufacturer. In such instances we must 1st—Mark bill, load and cart goods to the retailer.

2d—Cart the goods back to the warehouse.

3d—Have them entered on the returned goods book.

4th—Put the goods back in stock.

5th—Look up the purchase price.

6th—Send a credit memorandum.

7th—Journalize the credit.

8th—Post the credit to the ledger.

9th—Credit the item on the retailer's statement.

10th—Resell the goods so returned.

The most elaborate store paper I know of is issued by the A. B. Cowley & Co., Marquette, Neb. They send me a copy now and then; I have the September number before me now. It has eight pages about the size of the "Saturday Evening Post," filled with original reading and advertising matter, and is quite an impressive publication. Part of paper is Cowley & Co.'s and they have used it to very good advantage. The main object of the paper, apparently, is to fight the mail-order houses by showing that they are not really giving the values they pretend to give.

I have reproduced a page from the Cowley paper to show the way and 3 are of the same character the effort is to show that Montgomery Ward & Co.'s offerings are exaggerated and that the Co. store can do just as well or better.

For what it is—fighting advertising—this is good. It is snappy and convincing. I thought occurred to me as I looked it over—is it a good proposition to fight a thing so hard that you try to advertise it? You know people swear by that adage, "a knock is a boost." While I believe that altogether, there is certainly harm to one's self in fighting a thing so hard as to attract the attention of people who never have paid any attention before. Somebody in Marquette among Cowley & Co.'s own customers may have heard vaguely of the mail-order houses but was attracted by them. He reads about them in Cowley & Co.'s and straightway his curiosity interest are aroused. "I'll look into this mail-order business." He does so and at once falls into the big alluring catalogue of the romance that many people to think dwells in buying goods by mail. It might be that if Cowley & Co. had let the scheme alone of people might never have been interested in it. Another order fighter I know of has had judgment a better plan. He got out from his local freight and express agent the names of the people who are already getting goods from the mail-order houses and he bombards them by mail. There is no general publicity, no stirring up of general curiosity and interest.

NOTE.—This department is devoted to the criticism of advertising matter, to the devising of new advertising ideas for special occasions, upon request, and to the suggesting of original advertisements when data is supplied. Communications sent for this department should be addressed to the Editor of Science of Advertising. They will be taken up in strict rotation.

Sorry, "Dear Customer," but you live in Marquette, which is in "Kansas City Territory." 25 pounds of sugar for 98c is enough for you if you want it with a $10.00 grocery order.

Now if you only lived in "Chicago Territory" your dollar would buy 33 1/3 pounds of sugar with a $10.00 grocery order. However, if you must have it—see Cowley.

OUR SPECIAL SUGAR OFFERS

33 1/3 Pounds of Sugar for $1.00

Montgomery Ward & Co.
CHICAGO

You have no doubt noticed that there are no Chicago Montgomery Ward Grocery Lists to be seen in Marquette this time—not much—whether the "office boy," who balled things up last issue got "his" or "promised to do better next time" we don't know but just to convince you that the sugar discrimination as to price between the Chicago and Kansas City houses was no accident—but the usual thing, we are again reproducing their sugar offer made in Chicago territory as compared with the price you must pay.

We have insisted from the first that this sugar deal was a bait—and we believe that the Marquette people agree with us. We want your business on business principles only and refuse to resort to "cunning business tricks" regardless of what others may do.

WE WILL MEET EITHER MONTGOMERY WARD'S CHICAGO OR KANSAS CITY, OR SEARS ROEBUCK'S SUGAR DEAL AT THEIR TERMS AND CONDITIONS, IF YOU FEEL THAT YOU WISH TO BUY THAT WAY.

A COMPARISON OF VALUES.

All these brands are of equal quality. Montgomery Ward's price of 75c the dozen in Chicago is exactly the same delivered at Marquette 83c, as their price of 78c in Kansas City. The Sears Roebuck package contains 10 ounces, Montgomery Ward & Co.'s 9 ounces and our Superb Brand 9 ounces, so the comparative values are as follows:

Sears Roebuck price 120 ounces for 83c
Montgomery Ward gives 100 ounces for 83c
We give 100 ounces for 68c

Our car of CHOICE BEST FLOUR just unloaded is immediately UP TO THE HIGHEST GRADE OF FLOUR MILLED ANYWHERE. We leave the rest to YOU. If you are not perfectly satisfied IT IS OUR FLOUR and your money is ready for you.

REMEMBER—Montgomery Ward & Co. says: We reserve the right to limit the quantity of flour ordered to what we consider a fair quantity in proportion to a grocery order. We also reserve the right to refuse to fill orders for flour except when ordered with other groceries. Note: Flour of any kind cannot be included in our special sugar offer on page 3.

COWLEY SAYS: "We will sell you all the flour you want without any reservations whatever. The more you want the better it suits us and you may buy other goods or not as you please."

the expense is made up by advertisements from other Marquette merchants. There is one each from a bank, an automobile dealer, a hardware dealer, a carriage dealer, a blacksmith, a meat market, a milliner, and a doctor. The rest of the they get at this most important mail-order problem. I suppose there is no doubt that the mail-order houses are stronger in the West than the East, though they are strong enough everywhere. I am reproducing page 8; pages 2

Two Weeks More for the Window Display Contest—Ready?

The awards in the Window Display Contest of Lipton Teas will be made as soon after November 1st as is practicable. The contest closes that day. You have barely three weeks more.

The contest is for the five best window displays of Lipton's Tea. The "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" will give to the five retail dealers who make the most attractive window displays of Lipton's Tea before the end of this contest, the following cash prizes:—

For the Best	-	-	-	-	$75
For the Second	-	-	-	-	$50
For the Third	-	-	-	-	$25
For the Fourth	-	-	-	-	$15
For the Fifth	-	-	-	-	$10

CONDITIONS:

1. The display entered in the contest must be of Lipton's Tea alone.
2. The display must remain in the window one week.
3. Each contestant must send to this office a photograph of his display or a careful detailed description of it. Naturally a picture would be better, though a contestant need not incur that expense if he does not wish to. Almost every family now has a kodak-user in it who could photograph a window display.
4. Each contestant if he decides to enter the contest, will kindly drop this office a postal card to that effect.
5. The contest closes November 1, 1915.

The Subscribers' Bargain List

Have you got any goods you don't want? Anything—canned goods, groceries, hardware, dry goods, anything at all that's in good condition, but won't sell for you.

If you will make a price on it we can probably sell it for you in a hurry. Write us about it, stating the quantity, condition and your best price. You might give the original cost, too. We will give it a key number and offer it to our 4,000 subscribers. Your name will not appear unless you want it to. All sales ought to be on a cash basis.

The point is that what won't sell for you may be in everyday demand for somebody else, who will be glad to get your stock of it at a bargain.

There will be no charge for this service anywhere—we do it to help along.

Clean, Uncoated Rice

¶ Retailers who have given Imperator uncoated rice a chance have sometimes wondered why they sold so much more rice with no extra effort.

¶ One reason is that Imperator rice is uncoated—clean and natural—and con- sumers like that when they once under- stand it. The other reason is that it is fancy head rice of unusual quality.

How to Make Other Cocoas as Good as Ours

Take the average cocoa on the market and carry it through another process or two, and you may have an article about as good as Croft's Swiss Milk Cocoa.

The trouble is that other manufacturers will not use that "other process or two," be- cause of its cost. They prefer to send out their product half made, as it were—containing indigestible and ill-tasting in- gredients which should have been eliminated—so they can save a little on the cost of making.

Croft's Swiss Milk Cocoa has everything taken out that should be taken out, and for that reason, among others, it has the smoothest, finest flavor of any cocoa made.

Will you mention the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" when you write?

This Association Says, After Investigation, That Retailers Do Not Favor Stevens Bill

National Retail Dry Goods Association Sends Agents Over Country and Issues Letters. Over Ninety Per Cent. of All Retailers Who Expressed Themselves Said They Did Not Want Manufacturers to Fix Retail Prices. A Summary of Objections from the Retailer's Standpoint.

Some time ago the National Retail Dry Goods Association started out to find out whether the retailers of the country were really in favor of the Stevens bill or not. The Stevens bill is pending in Congress and will come up for passage during the coming winter session. It will give the manufacturer the authority which the courts now deny him, of compelling retailers to sell at prices which he fixes. The bill has been discussed both pro and con in this paper, and a series of arguments for it are being published weekly.

The National Retail Dry Goods Association sent agents through the country and also sent out letters. The agents covered the whole United States from coast to coast, and even went into the South. They have just returned with a report that over 90 per cent. of the retailers seen—and these comprised large and small—are against the bill.

To the letters sent out the association received 200 replies, of which 94 per cent. said the writers were against the bill and 6 per cent. favored it. The assertion of the American Fair Trade League that practically the united retail trade of the United States were demanding the passage of the Stevens bill, appears to have been untrue. The American Fair Trade League is composed of manufacturers who want the power which the act would give them.

As a result of the above canvass the National Retail Dry Goods Association has issued the following summary of objections to the Stevens bill from the retailer's standpoint:—

1. Such a law would be unconstitutional as class legislation, being in favor of a few thousand manufacturers at the expense of the retail merchants and the consumer.

2. It would make the retailer the agent of the manufacturer without the usual privilege of an agent of being permitted to return unsold stock. The merchants would supply all of the capital that was invested in the stock that they carried, whereas usually an agent has little or none of his capital invested. In other words, the control of the retail price would be placed in the hands of the manufacturer, although he has no financial risk or equity in the business.

3. It would prohibit low price opportunities to the consumer who wishes to economize. It would, for example, prevent important seasonal reductions in prices upon which most housewives depend—especially those of limited means. It would furthermore produce dull seasons, not relieved by special sales, and therefore discourage employment of a considerable number of salespeople in various department stores.

4. It would deprive the consuming public of the benefits of merchants' competition, which, if properly conducted, is not only in the interest of the public, but is recognized as an incentive to promote business efficiency among merchants.

5. It would give the manufacturer the right to name the retailer's purchasing price and his selling price, thereby controlling his profits. Thus the manufacturer could arbitrarily raise his price to the merchant's, while keeping the retail price at a fixed figure, or even reduce the latter, thereby curtailing the profits of the merchant.

6. It is contrary to the understanding which has always existed, in that a person who purchases an article outright has a right to do with it as he deems best. In the case of the retailer, to resell it at any price to the mutual advantage of himself and his customer.

7. It does not take into consideration different conditions under which an article might be resold. The merchant with large overhead charges, such as big rental, high priced selling force, the necessity for giving unusual service, would require a greater mark-up on his goods than the merchant with a less expensive establishment, in order to get a fair profit on his sales.

8. It would prevent legitimate competition of the small manufacturer who cannot engage in business against the large manufacturer who has created a demand for his brands by a long and continued advertising campaign. Thus it would encourage trusts as the large and wealthier manufacturer alone can afford to take advantage of his privileges under this bill by forcing a demand for his merchandise by publicity, and maintaining a proportionately high price. Having choked out competition he will raise his retail price; the consumer being, as in the case of the other trusts (Standard Oil) made to stand the burden.

9. It would encourage every manufacturer to brand his merchandise and then add to this cost by expensive advertising campaigns in order to create a consumer demand for it.

10. It would lower wages by so increasing the retail costs that many retailers would either be obliged to reduce wages or face bankruptcy.

11. It would not take into consideration the difference in cost between the stores situated near the source of supply and those at great distance. In some cases this difference in cost, transportation, insurance, etc., amounts to over 5 per cent.

12. The retailer who is in favor of such a law must feel the need of assistance in meeting competition which would be an acknowledgment of weakness on his part.

13. It would cause the consumer to look to the manufacturer to make good all defective merchandise instead of relying upon the reputation and responsibility of the retailer with whom he does business. This would be an expensive and inconvenient method for the consumer.

14. It has been condemned in principle by the courts as illegal, and in many States has been specifically prohibited in many laws passed for the protection of the public.

English Co-operative Buying Concern Still Making Profits.

The Leeds Industrial Co-operative Society, a big co-operative buying concern of England, reports $5,166,909 total sales for the half year ended June 1915, or an increase of $1,225,696 over the like period of 1914 and a record for the society. The share capital stood at $4,703,277, an increase of $226,462, and members increased 1,818 to 49,785. After allowing $80,900 for interest on capital and $53,453 for depreciation, the amount available for distribution was $662,353, which was disposed of as follows: Dividend on members' purchases aggregating $4,708,866, at 2s. 9d. in the pound (about 12 cents on each dollar's worth purchases) $655,030; for educational purposes $4,858; balance to next half year $2,465.

Ross Food Company Sued By Shredded Wheat Company

Asks for Injunction on the Ground That the Ross Shredded Wheat Biscuit is an Imitation of Shredded Wheat Biscuit and Will Be Confused With It by the Public When Separated from the Carton.

In New London, Conn., during the week the Shredded Wheat Co. has begun a suit against a firm of wholesale grocers and the Ross Food Co., of Batavia, N. Y., charging it with unfair competition in marketing a shredded wheat biscuit which is practically an exact duplicate of the product of the Shredded Wheat Co. The real defendant in the case is the Humphrey Cornell Co., wholesale grocers of New London, who are selling the Ross biscuit. Included in the suit are the Ross Food Co. and Andrew Ross, Frederick H. Towne and Ralph Valentine, its officers.

Andrew Ross, president of the Ross Food Co., is well known to the trade of the entire United States. He was formerly Philadelphia agent of the Shredded Wheat Co. and later was general sales manager for the Kellogg Toasted Corn Flake Co. He left the latter position more than a year ago and organized the Ross Food Co. at Batavia, N. Y. For some reason great delay has attended the efforts to introduce the Ross biscuit, and even now it is being offered and distributed in small way only. More pressure has been exerted in New England than anywhere else, and that is why the suit is brought there.

The Shredded Wheat Co. says their suit that the Ross Co. is making a shredded wheat biscuit which outside the carton is practically a facsimile of theirs. It is the same size, the same shape, the same color. As a large percentage of shredded wheat biscuit are sold by restaurants, being served from glass jars, the Shredded Wheat Co. says the Ross biscuit will frequently be confused with theirs. This, they say, constitutes unfair competition under the law.

Another charge is that the Ross carton is substantially of the same size, but contains only 10 biscuits (instead of 12 as packed by the Shredded Wheat Co.); that the Ross is not stated how many biscuits are in the Ross carton, which alone indicates and constitutes

Certain and Satisfactory Delivery Service

WHEN your competitor has a delivery car, you must have one too or become a back number.

If you get one first you win increased prestige and increased sales at your competitor's expense. For your patrons already are convinced that motor delivery cars furnish the only prompt and satisfactory service.

The Overland Delivery Car has proved a sound business investment—a money maker for many grocers.

We receive letters daily from progressive grocers declaring that the Overland Delivery Car is ideal for their work.

Here is one from Robert Elgin, of the Elgin Grocery Company, Kansas City, Mo.:

"On January 23, 1915, we purchased one Overland Delivery Car, and have run this car 7,500 miles over all kinds of roads and hills.

"The car has not been in the shop for repairs and up to date we have not spent one cent for repairs.

"Gas and oil consumed in car per month, $16.50.

"To-day we would not trade the Overland for any other make Delivery Car on the market."

What the Overland Delivery Car is doing for others it will also do for you.

It will pay you to investigate.

tentional unfair trading upon the part of the defendants, inasmuch as it is asserted the price is $2.80 for 36 packages, as against $3.60 for "Shredded Wheat."

An injunction is asked for, to prevent the Ross Co. and its customers from selling any shredded wheat biscuit which can be mistaken for the original product of the Shredded Wheat Co.

The core of the suit is contained in the following extract from the bill in equity:—

Your orator further shows unto your Honors that the manifest fraud of these defendants, corporations and individuals, in the manufacture and sale of whole wheat biscuit, appears in this that said defendants manufacture and sell these whole wheat biscuits in the same size, shape, peculiar formation and general appearance as your orator and that when said defendants' biscuits are separated from their carton or package and thus presented for actual sale or use to the consuming public, said defendants' biscuits are without any capability or possibility of distinction from the whole wheat biscuit of your orator, and that as a matter of fact the whole wheat biscuit of your orator and the whole wheat biscuit of these defendants are always presented to the ultimate consumer separate from their respective cartons, and that it is thus impossible by mere eye inspection to distinguish the biscuit product of your orator from the biscuit product of said defendants, thus intending as to result and purpose upon the part of the defendants, as your orator is informed and believes, to confuse and sell the whole wheat biscuit of these defendants as the whole wheat biscuit of your orator.

It is also claimed that the Ross Co. has used certain phraseology peculiar to the Shredded Wheat, such words as "contains all the elements necessary for building, nourishing and sustaining the human body," "shreds," "s h r e d d e d," "Shredded Wheat," "crispness of shreds," "heat the biscuit in oven to restore crispness." The Ross Co. is even accused of having used a "Shredded Wheat" biscuit from which to make the cut of a Ross biscuit on its carton. Yet it is claimed that the Ross biscuits are "much inferior in quality, both as to material and baking"; that the Ross biscuits are "produced in an attempted reconstructed ancient frame building, intended as a wheel factory, at Batavia, N. Y., without the possibility of the clean, sanitary and hygienic conditions present in the orator's plant and necessary to the production of a wholesome food product."

If the Ross biscuit is illegal, any person selling it is as liable under the law as the Ross Food Co. itself.

A Picture of English Association Meetings

Some Interesting Extracts from the Minutes of Three English Associations. Give Vivid Picture of Retailers Meeting for Self Improvement. Paramount Object is to Present Something Instructive.

We have received this week some matter by the English Institute of Certificated Grocers which supplies a very interesting glimpse into some of the meetings of some English grocers' associations. One can read this and almost see these grocers of another land in session. In some respects the English manner of conducting association meetings resembles ours, and in other respects it differs. We shall reproduce some of the matter referred to, pointing out the obvious effort at all of the meetings reported to present something instructive. This is practically the minutes of the meetings referred to.

The following is part of a report of a meeting held at Ashton-on-Tyne:—

After routine business Mr. Beeching expressed his great pleasure at meeting for the first time a branch of the Companionship in session assembled. He looked upon them as brothers in the great army of those who were working for improvement in their trade. His address would be on "Profit and the Means to Attain It"—by which he meant something more than the net £ s. d. gained by a business, important as that was. They would lead profitable lives only by realizing themselves physically, mentally, morally and socially. The Companionship would help them, and other means were the cultivation of their personality and persistent striving for an enlarged outlook and a greater capacity for affairs. Here comes in the programme of the Grocers' Institute with its provision of technical classes, and its encouragement by means of certificates and prizes. He exhorted them to lay hold of these means and to influence others.

Mr. Hilton, in moving a vote of thanks, said he would add another "P"—a man must be a plodder. He detailed the steps of his own strenuous career, and said that it was not so much knowledge, but the use one made of it that profited.

This is what took place at a meeting of the Rochdale Association:—

We held our monthly meeting of the Companionship on Wednesday. We had the pleasure of listening to a chatty address by Mr. C. L. T. Beeching, F.G.I., the Organizing Secretary of the Grocers' Institute, at a well-attended meeting held in the Education Guild Rooms, Acker street, Rochdale. Mr. J. L. Ratcliffe, F.G.I., president of the Rochdale Branch of the Companionship, was in the chair; others present included Messrs. A. Dixon, F.G.I., and Councilor Henry Wycherley, F.G.I. Mr. Beeching said that looking at the grocery trade from the beginning it had greatly benefited by being organized. In the thirteenth century, when the trade was founded, grocers were called spicers, because all the goods they dealt in were classed as spices. There was a trace of that now, for the French name for a grocer was "épicer," or spicer. Later these spicers enrolled themselves into the Guild of Spicers, more for charitable, benevolent and religious purposes than for any other object. Incidentally they adopted St. Anthony as the patron saint of the trade. They went on increasing and multiplying for a certain number of years, until they came to call themselves "grocers," meaning dealers in large quantities. It was thus early in the day that grocers began banding themselves together, and for many years it was impossible for a man to become a grocer in the city of London unless he was a member of the Guild of Grocers or Worshipful Company of Grocers, as it came to be called. The only way to enter the trade at that time was to be apprenticed for seven years to a master grocer. Very soon the apprentices formed societies of their own—another instance of the inclination of people connected with the grocery trade to organize. To cut a long story short, the apprentice of those days really learned his trade and emerged from apprenticeship, if not a master in it, at least a master of it. Reviewing this penchant for organization in the grocery trade, he was glad to be able to say it had done a great amount of good, and recent events had proved its value. About 13 months ago we were in the convulsions of the first days of the war. The population of this country were very excited, because they did not know whether there was going to be a famine in the land, and whether groceries would be procurable or not. So they made a stampede for the grocers' shops. What was it that allayed that excitement? Who was it that took the situation in hand and succeeded in restoring public confidence? It was the associated grocers, with the Federation at their back, and if the Federation had never proved its value before, it certainly proved it then.

The association at Hull seems especially active and enthusiastic:—

The Hull Branch of the Companionship held its meeting on Monday to hear two papers, one on "Tea," by Mr. J. T. Gibbons, A.G.I., and one on "Sugar," by Mr. W. B. Wright.

The minutes were read and carried. Then came the correspondence; a letter from Mr. W. Hudson, F.G.I., was read, expressing his inability to be present. He hoped we should have a splendid meeting. His wish came true, for more chairs had to be sent for. Mr. G. H. Williams, M.G.I., secretary of Pontypridd Branch, expressed sorrow for not being able to hold a meeting, owing to holidays of assistants, causing others to work late, but he expected a big rally in September's meeting. He kindly offered a second prize of 2/6 in the Badge Competition. Mr. P. T. Heath, of Hereford, wrote that he was confident of starting a grocers' class this year. He thought it would be a good thing if we could arrange an annual conference for Companionships.

Mr. Gibbons, A.G.I., then gave his paper on "Indian Tea." He traced the history of the tea plant from the time it was discovered by Capt. Charlton in 1831, up to quite modern times. In 1838, twelve boxes were shipped to England from Calcutta and sold in London at about 30/- per pound. Then followed ninety-five chests, realizing 11/- per pound. He then dwelt upon the most important tea-growing districts in India: Assam, Darjeeling, Nilgiri, and many more with very peculiar names. Mr. Gibbons dwelt most carefully on the gathering of the crops, and the very many different processes the leaf had to pass through before being ready for shipment, e. g., withering, rolling, fermenting, drying or firing, sorting and cutting. In the year 1913 the vast amount of 172,761,200 pounds of Indian tea was consumed in this country, equal to 6½ pounds per head. Then came how to make a cup of tea: (1) Get a good Indian tea, to suit the water of Hull; (2) put in one teaspoonful to every two breakfast cups; (3) use only fresh water; (4) stand for three to six minutes; (5) pour off immediately. The samples on view were examined very carefully.

Mr. G. Wood, F.G.I., of Messrs. Nichol & Wood, tea blenders, said he was pleased to be with us. He complimented Mr. Gibbons on his paper, which was very fine, indeed. Mr. Wood then told a story of a lady out visiting, and on being asked to take a cup of tea asked the question, "How long has the kettle been on the hob?" The answer immediately came, "Oh! I never take it off!" Then he had once heard that the Chinese covered their dead with tea leaves, and then exported the tea which had been used to us. Whether true or not he left it to the meeting. You must have a clean kettle and an earthenware teapot, well rinsed out and warm. He brought with him four samples and showed them to the members, who greatly benefited by his advice and description of each. The kinds shown were: (1) Mazingah; (2) Gelakey; (3) Doom Durma; (4) Itakovle; (5) Budlabet.

Mr. W. B. Wright then proceeded to give his paper on "Sugar." In its raw state sugar contains syrup, fiber, sand, mud, fluff from bagasse, glucose and salt of potash. All these impurities have to be removed. The process of refining was especially thorough. Commencing with the dirty looking mass, he proceeded step by step until the pure white crystals were obtained. This was a valuable and most instructive paper. Messrs. Henry Tate & Sons, Ltd., sugar refiners, had kindly sent samples illustrating the various stages of manufacture.

Mr. F. Atkinson, F.G.I., expressed his pleasure in being present and stated it was a privilege to listen to Messrs. Gibbons and Wright. He laid great stress on the dignity of the grocery trade, which was an honorable one, the finest and most interesting distributive trade in the country, and every member should endeavor to put it on a high plane. We had been twitted as "nation of shop keepers." He then carried our minds back to the Delales, who were great traders, and when Edward I gave Hull its charter, then came Wm. Delapole, merchant. Of his two sons, Richard came a wine merchant and William a banker. The son of William came first Mayor of Hull and established the Charterhouse. Richard, the other son of William, became the Earl of Suffolk, and here we find a trader becoming a member of the House of Lords. Then eventually the Earl of Suffolk rose to be Duke of Suffolk, who married the sister of the King, and their spring, John of Lincoln, was eventually named for the throne of England, but the battle of Bosworth turned the tide. Were it not for that we should have had the descendant of a trader aspiring to wear the royal crown. There was indeed something in the dignity of the grocery trade.

A football club has been formed, E. Marshall, captain; I. Goy, vice-captain; C. A. Green, secretary and treasurer; committee, Messrs. Cattle, Green, Goodwill, Todd, Good and J. G. Rider.

One gets from these reports a vivid picture of a company of earnest business men, meeting together on association nights for the purpose of self improvement.

Participant in Local Jobbers' Cutting Campaign Tells How It Has Worked Out

Reduced Either Profits or Sales. Salesmen Inspired to Harder Work to Sell Something Else Which Pays a Profit.

There is considerable speculation and curiosity as to what effect the plan of several Philadelphia wholesalers to cut prices on packaged and proprietary goods has had. As was explained in your paper some time ago, the plan was created to meet the competition of the Standard Grocery Co. and the chain stores. My belief is that all wholesalers who went into the plan are now cutting prices of a long list of advertised goods to cost, if necessary, wherever it is necessary to hold a customer.

Having participated to some extent in the plan, the writer says without hesitation that it has been a great success.

Some of the participants got back some of their customers who had "gone after strange goods" some time ago. He did it by cutting one or two prices and the whole order came back.

There has been, so far as we know, no reckless cutting whatsoever.

The jobbers who are working together cut only when they are forced to in order to hold trade. Some of the jobbers in the plan tells that his salesmen have not cut anything any to speak of, although he is ready to do so any time he finds it necessary. The whole tendency is away from cutting, not only with the house but with the salesman, the share of the profits will increase every time he cuts.

In one case one wholesale house lost a good customer by the cutting of a competitor. Before this plan was put into execution, the first named house would have preserved its dignity by staying away, but they considered themselves warranted by the plan in going in and competing for the business, which they did. They made a few cuts and got the customer back. This would not have been done in this way six months ago.

I can frankly say that the cutting of price has caused no falling off of profits and no falling off in sales. It has caused harder work on the part of the salesmen. A salesman who cuts a price to cost, works twice as hard to get an order for something else out of the customer which he can make a profit on. This has worked out very well, and the loss on the goods cut has amounted in sum total to very little.

The jobbers do not like to appear in the position in which the New York "Journal of Commerce" has placed them in its columns, of having gone into an era of reckless cutting, and all that sort of thing. They have not done any such thing. They have simply done what anybody would have done—protected themselves against being driven out of business. They cannot sit still and do nothing, and the only way open to them is to meet the prices which their competitors are making.

WITH THE EDITOR

I venture to make a prediction regarding the Stevens bill, which has been many times discussed, as befits its importance, in this paper. The Stevens bill, which will come before Congress for passage this winter, seeks to give manufacturers the right to command retailers to sell at prices which the manufacturers shall fix. The only conspicuous advocates of the measure are the manufacturers who compose the American Fair Trade League of New York. They say the entire distributing trade want the bill passed too, but an article in another column would seem to cast doubt on this statement.

My prediction is this: that if the Stevens bill is defeated, this one argument will defeat it: that it seeks to prescribe a fixed and invariable profit for retailers whose need of a profit varies very greatly, and who cannot possibly be well served when all are given the same profit, any more than they can all be equally well fitted when all are given the same suit of clothes.

If the Stevens bill passes, the manufacturer of any proprietary article will have the right to prescribe the same profit for the small retailer with heavy proportionate expenses; for the large retailer with heavy expenses, whose business is done mostly on credit; and for the large or small retailer who sells close for cash.

These retailers, and many other variations from these classes, have widely different needs as to profit. The large dealer with close expenses who sells for cash can probably get along on less profit than anybody else. And he is willing to get along on less—probably that is the chief factor in his business. The Stevens bill would compel a man like that to get a larger profit than he needed or even wanted; it would compel him to extort from his customers money whose collection he considered unfair. And what is more, it would probably destroy his business, for it would prevent him from using the business genius which enabled him to sell below his competitors and still succeed. Such a man is not a cutter; he sells regularly and systematically below his competitors because he can afford to. Nevertheless, under the Stevens bill, all this is ignored. A condition will exist as absurd as the condition surrounding union labor, wherein, in certain lines, all men get the same wage whether they are good, bad or indifferent workmen.

Of course the manufacturer has an answer to the above, but it is the selfish answer that his interests demand protection even at the expense of everything else. I don't agree with that and I don't believe Congress will agree with it.

You can say what you please about trading stamps—damn them or praise them as you like—but the fact remains that they seem to bear a charmed life. Although made the subject of the bitterest attacks all over the United States, although laws have been passed against them in probably half the States, not in one case have they been even seriously inconvenienced. One after the other, the laws seeking to cripple or destroy them have been upset by the courts, and the position of the trading stamp to-day seems, from a legal standpoint, practically invincible.

The latest anti-stamp law to be upset is that recently passed in Oregon. It pretended to be a tax law, but was really aimed to destroy the stamp scheme, because it imposed a tax which nobody could have paid. The same law was introduced in the Pennsylvania Legislature last year; if I remember correctly, it imposed a $2,000 tax on everybody handling the stamps. At the time I expressed the opinion that the law would not hold water because it sought to destroy a business under the guise of merely taxing it. This has been tried a thousand times, but has never once succeeded. If the tax is heavier than taxes usually are, the courts are quick to see the destructive motive behind it and that is precisely what they did in Oregon. There is no principle more firmly established than that a legitimate business—and trading stamps, whatever one may think of their advisability, are legitimate—cannot be destroyed by excessive taxation.

I greatly regret that Andrew Ross, whom I should say has the respect of the entire trade and the liking of most of it, should have made what seems to have been a serious mistake in launching his shredded wheat biscuit business. There is perhaps room for another shredded wheat biscuit, if its product is as good as the present company's product, and it is sold fairly and honestly on its own merits. The Shredded Wheat Co. would be the last concern, I am sure, to interfere with a business like that. It has seen fit to interfere by an injunction suit, with the Ross business because it says that the Ross shredded wheat biscuit is merely an imitation of its own and will inevitably be confused with it by the public. And whether it is an imitation or not, the Ross biscuit is practically an exact facsimile, having the same size, shape and color. Put a jar of Shredded Wheat biscuit beside a jar of Ross biscuit and probably their own manufacturers couldn't pick which was which.

We believe that launching a new business with this questionable ingredient in it was a very serious mistake. There is nothing particularly desirable about the present shape of shredded wheat biscuit. It can be given another shape just as easily. Mr. Ross therefore laid himself open to the suspicion of having deliberately adopted a competitor's trade-mark, so to speak, from an unfair and improper motive. It appears that he could not have had any good motive for doing what he did; there is only one other motive he could have had. It is a pity that anybody is so shortsighted as to do such a thing. In this case the founder of a new business—for which, properly conducted, there is plenty of room—is confronted at its outset with expensive litigation which will very possibly result in his being compelled to change his entire equipment.

Not only that, but the business everywhere is given a black eye. the Ross biscuit is illegal, every one who sells it—broker, jobber, retailer—is as liable to the penalty of the law as the Ross Food Co. itself.

Retail merchants often make one of two mistakes, either of which is exceedingly hurtful to their business. 1—They forget that consumers are not obliged to come to their stores, and are overly independent; or 2—They look on the fact that consumers do come, as a sort of charitable favor, and fawning on customers, excite contempt.

Two Bad Mistakes.

The real merchant assumes an attitude as nearly between these extremes as he can make it. He remembers constantly that there are plenty of other stores as good as his, and is therefore careful not needlessly antagonize consumers and send them to those other stores.

On the other hand he refuses to agree that consumers do him a charitable favor when they come with him. He assumes—which is usually true—that they choose his store because they prefer his merchandise or his manners, and because they feel that they get their money's worth. Therefore it is a business transaction in which he gives as good as he gets and nobody anything.

The store that makes this policy and avoids the two mistakes spoken of will be twice as attractive to consumers as the other kind.

Big Southern Exemptions Unfair to Creditors.

Business interests of the Southern States encounter great hardships because the exemption laws of that territory allow debtors to hold so much of themselves. A man can fail with a debt of several thousand dollars, all of which he can hold under the exemption law. A Georgia referee wrote that in a chelle case no dividend would be paid for of the assets realized, amounting to about $3,000, all was to be turned over to the bankrupts as homestead exemption.

Why a Manufacturer Should Be Permitted to Fix the Retail Price of His Product.

Views of Various Believers in This Doctrine Who Offer Them as Arguments for the Pending Stevens Bill.

—By M. Zimmerman, Special Trade Investigator, 375 Manhattan Avenue, New York.

The growth of chain stores has recently been referred to in the paper columns, and not long ago the Kellogg Toasted Corn Co. startled the grocery trade with a roadside challenge to the grocers of the country to wake up what was going on in Philadelphia in extending the chain system and squeezing the jobber and independent retailer out of a living. Such articles as this have only stirred trade circles, and there is a disposition among the grocers to pay some attention to analyzing the situation and perhaps doing what can be done to prevent the ultimate absorption of the independent retail mercantile field into the hands of a few gigantic monopoly systems.

The chain store is a manipulator of prices. We will say the chain-store concern has a hundred stores. It can manipulate those stores in the same manner in which the Standard Oil Co. could manipulate its various branch companies, by manipulating its various territories. In one section it may do that by going down the price of every standard brand of article it carries, and in another section, where they do not have the competition, they will raise the price or keep the price at the same high point as was charged by the other retail stores.

And they will do that. They will cut standard brands and cut the price on them down in some places. When you come into that store you must remember that the store of to-day is one of the most impressive you can walk into. A person is absorbed by the sight of many clerks and all the modern equipment which the chain store has, and so the purchaser, almost overcome by all this modern equipment and all these modern arrangements, will not have the nerve to question the price which the chain store puts on an article, but he will have the nerve to question the price charged by the smaller retailer, and he will frequently put it up to the small retailer where the great advantage of the chain store lies.

This is unfair competition; it is cut-throat competition. It is unfair advertising, and it is a common thing which is done by these cut-throat artists.

And then I want to tell you about another thing which they do. Suppose a customer asks for a demonstration of a machine, a certain brand of machine. They will take that brand of machine and bring it up to the customer and demonstrate it in the same way, and every time they will convince that customer that that machine is a bad machine. They will do that with the other man's machine. This is being practiced constantly by the chain stores and by every dealer who uses the cut-price articles as a basis of his trade.

I was talking to a dealer not long ago in regard to this question of cutting prices, and he told me—he gave me his usual hard-luck story, which I had been listening to for some time. He said, "there is a nasal douche which I sell for 25 cents, and I make a decent profit on that. One of my customers came in the other day and asked me for that kind of a douche, and she wanted it in a hurry. I did not have it in stock, and I sent my boy down to one of the big chain stores to get one of those nasal douches. He paid 35 cents for it. It was a good thing that my boy brought back the bill for that. If he had not brought back the bill, and if I had charged that customer of mine 35 or 40 cents for that douche she would have thought that I was robbing her, and I would have lost a customer right there." That is what they are doing right along.

I was talking the other day with a manufacturer of a vacuum cleaner. He said, "Is there any chance of this price-cutting bill getting through Congress?" I said, "I hope so." He said, "I am up against it hard, and unless we have legislation immediately in regard to this subject I am going to go out of business." He said, "I am putting out a fine vacuum cleaner, for which I receive, at retail, $38.50." He said, "There is a certain company in New York which also manufactures a vacuum cleaner of their own. This manufacturer, who is cutting the price, advertises about half a dozen different makes of vacuum cleaners, which he gets from other manufacturers.

"He takes my vacuum cleaner which I sell for $38.50—that is, the retailers who handle my vacuum cleaner get $38.50 for it—and he cuts the price on that to $29.50."

He said, "I would not mind it so much if he sold the very same machine, the very same model I have," but, he said, "he does not do that; he takes an old model of my machine, a model that I have discarded for several years, and he puts that machine on sale."

Scheme to Boom Apples Supported by Retailers, According to State Commissioner. Revolutions in Sugar Selling. Proposal to Tax Sugar Consumed Instead of Sugar Imported. Market Summary.

Special Correspondence of "Modern Merchant and Grocery World."

New York, October 22, 1915.

The controversy between the State of New York, or, more accurately, the New York State Department of Foods and the Markets, and the wholesale apple dealers of this city still continues. Commissioner Dillon, of the Department, gave out a statement during the week that 300 retail dealers are now handling New York State apples as a result of the Department's effort to introduce the fruit. He further said that nearly all these retailers were selling apples to the consumer at unusually low prices, netting a profit of not more than 20 per cent. According to Mr. Dillon, the retailers attend the auctions personally or have a broker go there. He says the Jas. Butler stores are among the largest users under the new plan. These stores, according to the Commissioner, are selling apples at a profit of less than 17 per cent.

The trade are exceedingly exercised over the recent revolutions announced by the sugar refiners. These are general throughout the refiners' territory and have already been commented upon in your paper. The first was an announcement last week that from then on refiners would invoice sugar at the price ruling when it was purchased instead of the price ruling when it was delivered. The second announcement was made during the past week that henceforth when an advance in price is made, no orders will be accepted by the refiners at the old prices. Heretofore there has been considerable manipulation of sugar prices. In order to bull the market refiners would announce an advance, but would state that they would accept orders at the old price. Since it appeared to be good business to give them, a large number of orders would be received. From this time on, when a price is advanced, all orders taken subsequent to that will be at the new price. The new plan will also stop a general habit of the brokers of entering an order for their customers without specific authority immediately after the market has advanced.

Mr. F. C. Lowry, sales manager of the Federal Sugar Refining Co., whose literature in favor of free sugar, ostensibly written as secretary of the "Wholesale Grocers' Committee," has not been forgotten, is out this week with a new statement. He has sent a letter to President Wilson opposing the present plan of retaining the sugar tariff which was to have been removed May 1, 1916. Mr. Lowry thinks that sugar should go on the free list next May, but that the loss of revenue which that would cause should be made up by putting on what he calls a "consumption tax" of 1 cent per pound. The Lowry letter to the President is very long and cannot be reproduced here.

His plan, in a nutshell, which he says would yield $84,000,000 a year, involves taxing all sugar consumed in this country. It would be an internal revenue tax similar to the tax imposed on certain other products, such as tobacco, liquor and oleomargarine. Meanwhile sugar would enter the country free of duty.

The American Specialty Manufacturers' Association has issued invitations for its seventh annual convention, to be held at the Hotel Statler, Detroit, Mich., on November 18th and 19th.

The new Vincent Astor Public Market, which is located at Broadway and Ninety-fifth street, opened last Saturday and was attended by large crowds. The management had two wagons on hand to deliver goods to buyers, but was compelled to hire five more. The market was established to give farmers and fruit producers a chance to go in there at small rent and deal with consumers directly. It is open from 7 in the morning until 8 in the evening, except on Saturdays, when it is open until 11. The prices charged there so far have been a shade below the average retail grocery prices in the neighborhood.

SUMMARIZED MARKET CONDITIONS.

Tea somewhat improved in demand. Low grades, especially Congous, firmer on account of scarcity. Other grades unchanged.—Coffee perhaps a shade better on improved demand. Rio and Santos are wanted, at a shade higher.

Milds fairly active, with some grades such as low-grade Maracaibos, being cleaned up.—Sugar much excited on account of large foreign demand. Cuban sugars, this being due to closing down of the Panama Canal, preventing the making of shipments. Refiners selling 5.25 cents for granulated; domestic and beet sugar ranging from 5.05 to 5.25 cents. Raws are quoted as high as 5.25 cents.—Tomatoes somewhat easier on account of lack of demand. Potatoes about 5 cents per dozen for Maryland, below the highest point. Canned goods unchanged, and fairly active.—Spot prunes still steady and high. Coast market about steady. Currants scarce and high, with no immediate prospect of more stocks. Raisins steady to firm. Seedless very firm. Market strengthened on account of freight upset in the West. Citron in primary markets on account of city.—Canned salmon quiet and unchanged.—Wheat easier on account of very heavy receipts. Market a cent a bushel lower than a week.—Flour quiet and about unchanged price.

Small Hope Just Now of Bankruptcy Amendment Eliminating Grocery Bills

National Retail Grocers' Association Continues Its Campaign, But Letters Received from Congressmen Show Obstacles in Amendment's Way.

The National Retail Grocers' Association has been laudably trying for years to have the National Bankruptcy Act amended so that debts for necessities, such as groceries, will not be discharged by bankruptcy proceedings. In other words, a man may go through bankruptcy and be discharged, but he will still owe his grocery bill and it can be collected from him if he ever gets anything.

Some time ago Secretary Ryan, of the National Retail Grocers' Association, addressed letters to several Senators and Congressmen asking them what they thought the chances were of passing such an amendment. We reproduce some of the replies below. They do not give a great deal of hope:—

From Sydney Anderson, of Minnesota, Former Secretary of the Retail Merchants' Association of His County.

In my opinion, no injustice would result from the passage of an amendment to the bankruptcy law which in effect would provide that claims for necessities in the common law sense of that term should not be affected by a discharge in bankruptcy. Of course, the present law requires the scheduling of such debts, and such claims are therefore discharged by the discharge of the bankrupt under existing laws.

If Section 17 of the Act of July 1, 1898, were amended so as to except from the debts of a bankrupt which are released by his discharge, such as are incurred for necessities for the use of the bankrupt and his family within five years prior to the date of the application, the result desired would be effected, I think. If this amendment were adopted, and the debt nevertheless scheduled by the bankrupt, the creditor could still bring an action upon it, and if the defense of a discharge in bankruptcy were imposed, recover upon proof that the debt was incurred for necessities for the bankrupt and his family within five years prior to the application. As far as I can see now, there is no just objection to such an amendment, and I think I should have no hesitancy in favoring it.

In my own practice, wherever it has been necessary to schedule debts for necessities, I have always endeavored to have the bankrupt arrange for that payment after discharge.

From Knute Nelson, of Minnesota.

Some years ago I attempted to have the bankruptcy law amended so as to meet such cases as those to which you refer, and would have succeeded if it had not been for the interference of the labor organizations. They have their representatives in Washington during sessions and at other times watching legislation. Their representatives appeared before the Judiciary Committee of the Senate and insisted that to make such changes would be a discrimination against the laboring men; that they ought to have the same privilege of going into bankruptcy as other people, and that there should be no discrimination. In view of this opposition I found it uphill work at that time to accomplish what I desired. I am still in favor of an amendment along those lines, but whether it can be accomplished or not, I do not know. This administration has been, to a large extent, catering to the labor organizations and I imagine we could get little support from the higher authorities.

By Moses E. Clapp, of Minnesota.

My own judgment is that Congress would be in no temper in winter to deal with the bankruptcy law. The question of military preparedness will be put forward, and that with the question of revenue will undoubtedly about sidetrack other legislation. My own judgment is that as soon as the country quiets down again, one of the things to be taken up will be the repeal of the bankruptcy law, but I doubt very much whether anything can be done until that condition is reached.

A Tale of Two Cents.

It is so unusual for coffee importers and roasters to pay more than the market price for coffee that the firm Wm. B. Harris Co., of New York, call attention to the fact that the usual is the usual thing for them. Recently they paid 2 cents a pound above the market for some Java in order that their entire line of coffee should be above the average. They make a specialty of Cup Quality coffee, and they believe they have a monopoly of quality—because everything that is the best that is in the market. Maybe you have or would like to have such a reputation in your local market. Advt.

The Grocery Markets

Tea.

The tea market shows no particular change during the week, except that the situation in new Congous is somewhat unsettled. There have been preliminary indications of new Congous which, if indicated what the Government is going to do about the Congous still to be, will mean that several millions of pounds of this grade of tea will be sent out of this country. This has also its effect upon the market. Other grades of tea show no change for the week and fair demand.

Coffee.

There is no change to report in the coffee market during the past week. Domestic demand for Rio and Santos coffees is very fair, but prices unchanged from a week ago. Mild grades show no change for the week. High-priced Maracaibos are becoming scarce and there is a prediction that soon the supply will be gone. Java and Mocha show no change.

Sugar.

The sugar market has been booming during the week and as the week closes prices generally are asking 5.25 cents for granulated, while raws have advanced to around 4.39 cents. The main cause of the advance is the closing of the Panama Canal. This prevented the United States and France from getting Peruvian sugars that they had bought and shipped them to go into the market freely and buy Cubas. This had an instantaneous effect upon the market. The present situation is very strong. Prices are expected to go higher. As for raws that had been bought and made available, however, the situation will probably ease off.

Syrup and Molasses.

Glucose is unchanged at a 10-point advance noted last week. Sugar syrup is quiet, due to the resumption of warm weather and prices are unchanged. Corn pound syrup is feeling a little higher on account of the advance in price, but shows no material change. Molasses is unchanged and quiet.

Canned Goods.

Tomatoes are easier, due apparently to falling off in the demand. Plenty of stock can now be bought at 85 cents per bushel in Maryland 3s in a large way, f. o. b. New York. This is from 2½ to 5 cents higher than the top prices. Buyers are getting very few tomatoes now, and if they come in with any kind of orders the market will probably react, but it will not get quite as high in as short a time as was prophesied some time ago. Doubtless the supply of tomatoes will be short during the coming season. The situation shows no change. The situation is still firm. Peas continue to be heavy and rather easy. The trade has predicted that New York State gallon apples will make a sharp advance within the next few months, as it is evident, the prophets say, that the pack is not going to be very heavy. This has not stimulated buying, however, as yet. California canned goods show no change and quiet demand. Small Eastern staple canned goods unchanged and dull.

Fish.

The Norway mackerel situation has not improved. Spot stocks are very small and prices firm. It looks like practically no new Norway mackerel this year. Salmon shows no change for the week and the demand is fair. Domestic sardines quiet. The foreign sardine situation continues to get worse. French sardines are practically out of the market. Portuguese are still offered to some extent, but at very high prices. Norwegian sardines are also moving upward; scarcity, rather than manipulation appears to be the cause of the movement. Kipper herring are almost out of the market. Instead of a normal price at $1.10, sales have been made during the week at $1.80.

Dried Fruits.

Prunes on spot continue to be very firm and high, at unchanged prices, however, for the week. The scarcity of prunes on spot, due in part to the closing of the Panama Canal, is the reason. There are plenty of prunes on the coast, and out there the market is not so firm. Peaches are quiet and unchanged. Apricots largely on foreign demand, but particularly on domestic demand, are still very firm, but at unchanged prices. Seedless raisins are going to be very scarce and high during the entire season. No change has occurred during the week. Currants are exceedingly scarce on spot and the price is almost impossible to quote. It is difficult to see how any new ones can be gotten much inside of a month.

Beans and Peas.

The bad weather is still interfering with the threshing of beans, and domestic pea beans are therefore ruling at $3.80 per bushel in a large way. This is a shade above a week ago. Marrows are unchanged and quiet. California limas are somewhat higher for the week, due in part to the congestion in freights on the coast. The latter is due to the Panama Canal situation. Shippers are being compelled to ship East by a much more expensive route, and this has had an effect upon the price. Green and Scotch peas, by reason of scarcity, have advanced from 20 to 30 cents per bushel, and are ranging now around $2.80 in a large way.

Butter.

The butter market is steady, with a good consumptive demand. Prices are unchanged for the week. Arrivals of butter show an average good quality for the season, and the quantity is also about normal.

Eggs.

The egg market is firm and unchanged with the usual consumptive demand for the season. Very few of the present arrivals are showing high grade and the bulk of the receipts therefore have to be sold at prices based upon their varying quality. The market is steady on the present basis.

Cheese.

Cheese is firm at an advance of $\frac{1}{4}$ cent. The consumptive demand is good and the quality of the receipts is good. The market is healthy throughout.

Provisions.

The provision market is showing some very unusual advances for the season. An advance was noted last week and this week there has been another advance in all cuts of smoked meats of $\frac{1}{4}$ cent. The consumptive demand is only moderate, but apparently the export demand is the cause of the higher prices. Pure and compound lard are also firm at an advance of a $\frac{1}{2}$ cent. The consumptive demand is good. Dried beef, barreled pork and canned meats are all unchanged and in moderate demand.

INDIVIDUAL MARKET REPORTS.

Standard Canned Goods.

The buying of tomatoes during the week was very steady, and the goods were just as widely scattered as heretofore. The average size of the orders received was not any larger, and there was a lack of that "touch and go" spirit that usually prevails during October in this market. The "big" buyers of tomatoes held aloof in the early part of the season, when the prices were at the lowest point, and now they are watching for the crop to come back in October in anticipation of a chance to buy to better advantage than at to-day's quotations. Nothing of special interest occurred during the week to strengthen the market, while, on the other hand, there were no developments in any direction to weaken it. The buying is sufficient to keep the market on an even keel, and the closing of navigation via the lake and rail lines is expected to bring, as usual, an increased number of orders from those sections of the West and Northwest which have the benefit of the cheaper freight rates.

Corn is in fair demand from the lowest priced quality up to the highest priced goods, especially the fancy shoe-peg variety. The demand from the West for the new pack of sweet potatoes is larger than usual, first, because the present prices are low and attractive, and, also, because the canners and jobbers were entirely sold out last spring. They will do to buy now. The improvement in the quality of spinach canned in Baltimore is attracting more orders than in previous seasons, and purchases made now are safe. The same may be said of the highest grades of stringless and cut beans, both green and white wax. For the other items of vegetables the demand is light and the quotations are unchanged.

The canning season is on for pears and apples. The buying of them has not started up in a large way, as yet, but the daily small orders show they will be wanted later on. Pie peaches and second peaches are selling moderately; the higher grades being neglected. Very little business is doing these days in berries, cherries and pineapples, but they will all have their day.

Quiet market for cove oysters this week, and the prices are unchanged. The fall canning season will open shortly.

Spices.

The market continues active and very much unsettled. There has been a general stiffening throughout the list. This, we believe, is due largely to shortage in supply of many grades and there is a small chance for replenishment of stocks for several months to come.

Peppers.—Are fairly active and prices continue steady. Supplies here are very small. There is very little pepper coming here except Lampong. This grade of pepper has been practically off the market for some time.

Red Peppers.—Are firmly held at steady prices. We believe higher prices will be realized.

Cloves.—Very scarce here. Prices in London are far above those ruling in our country.

Pimento (Allspice).—Higher, due to heavy buying by England. This spice has been unusually low and higher prices are in order.

Mace.—In better demand. Cheap grades are reported scarce.

Nutmegs.—Unchanged and not very active. Present prices we consider safe.

Cassias.—In better demand at generally firm and somewhat higher prices, especially for China grades.

Gingers.—Unchanged during the week—demand fair.

Green Ginger Root.—In fair demand. Prices continue low.

Paprikas.—There has been a better demand for this article at steady prices. Stocks in our country are small and any unusual demand will have a tendency to advance prices.

Imported Fish Specialties.

Imported food products seem to be getting scarcer every day, and prices are going higher. We have just cabled an order to Norway for some fat herring at a price which is just 50 per cent. higher than we paid four or six weeks ago for exactly the same goods. We were afraid then that we could not sell those herrings at the high price, but they went like hot cakes, and we are obliged to pay this enormous new price, trembling in our shoes for fear our trade will object to pay this new and enormous advance. But what are we to do? If we want to stay in business we simply have to follow the market and buy at the prevailing market. Of course, we are not swallowing more than we can chew, and we are buying in a hand-to-mouth way.

Prices for Holland herrings have somewhat receded in anticipation of an enormous catch, and it is the opinion of our correspondents in Holland that we shall see lower prices for this commodity, so there will probably be a chance for us to import some of these Holland herrings in the near future.

Scotch herrings, of course, are scarce, particularly those of fancy and desirable quality. Our correspondents in Norway cable that it is rather too early to quote a price on new Norway mackerel. If we may believe their reports, the catch is short, the quality not at all desirable this season and size, practically all small; but we venture to say these reports are not absolutely reliable, and we prefer to wait for developments before acquiring what we need for this season's supply. Of course, we may be mistaken, but this is our opinion.

An unfortunate situation exists in the Norwegian sardine market. Prices have advanced by leaps and bounds, owing to the enormous demand which Norwegian packers had from the countries now at war. It seems that they have been buying those sardines irrespective of cost. Unfortunately, or probably fortunately, the American public is not so hungry for Norwegian sardines as others seem to be, and they are not falling over each other to pay the advanced prices. There is a good, steady hand-to-mouth business done in Norwegian sardines, and of course all lots that are offered below the market are being snapped up quickly by eager buyers, but to buy at present exorbitant prices, in our opinion, would be folly. French sardines do not enter into competition, because there are hardly any of them. In Portugal the catch has been disappointing and the little that has been shipped has found ready buyers, but we should not forget that the catch ought to be going on now in Portugal waters, and if a lot of fish strikes the coasts we may be able to get supplies. Of course, we cannot reckon with the usual low prices at which Portuguese sardines are sold, and we will have to allow for an advance, owing to the advance of raw materials, scarcity of labor, etc.

My Aunt Mary, Friend Wildey and the Mail Order Game.

I been reading the stuff of that man Wildey on how to burn up the mail-order people. Reads fine, don't it? Wild stuff by Wildey, if you ask me.

He only left out one thing. All he's got to do, to make his scheme work like a breeze, is to change people's human dispositions. And of course that's a cinch. Anybody can change anybody else's disposition. All they got to do is to kill 'em.

Why neither Wildey or anybody else has any idea of this mail-order game, unless they've lived with it. Take it from me, it's the strongest game that's ever been put across. It's got the people plumb dippy. People that you wouldn't think would bother with it at all are all wrapped up with the idea of buying stuff from a great big catalogue by mail.

Not long ago I stopped a night at my Aunt Mary's. You've heard me tell of my Aunt Mary—as good a soul as ever lived. Her name fits her right—she's just the kind of a woman you think of when anybody says "Aunt Mary."

Well, Aunt Mary's pretty long headed for a female about a lot of things, but the mail-order game's got her plumb foozled and she's wild about it. She's as wild about it in her way as Wildey's wild about it in his way. She's been buying stuff by mail for ten years—bought of Larkin and of Montgomery Ward and of some New York house, I don't remember its name.

The night I got there the first thing I saw was the great big Montgomery Ward book on the table in the sitting room. Just come in by mail.

"By George, Aunt Mary," I said, "I see you're still dippy over the mail-order business. I thought you'd have come to your senses by this time."

"Now you just be still!" she said, "if you start on that again you'll get no waffles for your supper. Mind what I say now—I mean it!"

Aunt Mary wouldn't hurt the filthiest fly that ever laid its million rotten eggs in her little boy's hair, so I didn't get cold feet about the waffles.

Pretty soon Sue, her married daughter that lives with her, came in. She had been up to the city all day, but she didn't do much shopping. Said she wanted to wait till she saw what was in the Montgomery Ward book.

The first thing Sue heard when she got in the house was Aunt Mary calling out from the kitchen "it's come, Sue; there it is on the table."

It turned out they had been waiting for it for days.

D'ye know any local storekeeper that can make people wait for his ads. for days? Take it from me, it's some job to get people to pay any attention to 'em when they come.

All during supper Aunt Mary and Sue talked about what Sue'd seen in the city stores, and how it wouldn't compare with Montgomery Ward stuff. I asked myself did it really compare, or is it possible that these mail-order people are really selling stuff lower than everybody else? Don't make any difference as long as people are fooled about it.

After the dishes were done—I offered to help, but they both insulted me—they came in and began to eat up the catalogue.

"I know you're not interested in this, Percy," said Aunt Mary to me, "but we've got to look up some things. It'll only take five or ten minutes."

As a matter of fact it took two hours. Those two women didn't get through chewing over that book till half past ten!

"What are you going to buy, Aunt Mary?" I asked.

"We don't know yet," said Sue,

"we're just looking. Just shopping, so to speak," she added with a laugh. "Oh, look here mother, here's an all silk petticoat for $2.89! All colors. Simpson's cheapest today was $3.50!"

"Maybe Simpson don't sell that kind of stuff," I said.

Neither of 'em paid any attention to that. I tried again.

"Is Aunt Mary buying any silk petticoats?" I said.

"No," said Sue, "but it goes to show the values you can get, don't it?"

"No, it don't," I said, but nobody heard it, for by that time they were on a journey through the aluminum ware department.

"Listen here, Aunt Mary," I said after they had finally put the book down, "do you really think you stuff cheaper from these people?"

"Some things I know I do," said.

"And are they the only things you buy from the catalogue?"

"No," she said, "I buy a lot of things that I can't get at any of our town stores at all. Where stores have a dozen styles, Montgomery Ward will have fifty. I have so much wider choice."

Just at the minute I could think of any come-back to that. I was talking about being loyal to the home stores or anything that—not to a woman, even a good soul like Aunt Mary. She'd till she dropped for anybody she liked, but you could talk till your tongue wore out about being loyal to her own stores and she could see it.

I'll tell you how to get Aunt Mary away from the mail-order books. Put a store with a catalogue just like theirs right in her town, selling at the same price, handing out the same guff—and have no doubt Aunt Mary'll be there. Get that, Wildey?

Weekly Window Display Suggestions

Hallowe'en Display.

Cover floor of window with green crepe paper. Use a width of paper across the rear, tacking a long strip of ivy leaves along the top. Cover suspended lights with paper pumpkin heads. Make two pyramids of choice, well-shined apples on boxes, capping each pyramid with a pumpkin face. An effective Hallowe'en touch is the camp fire made of wood and red tissue paper. At night an electric light bulb, hidden in the red paper, will heighten the illusion. Fill the boiler which hangs from three rustic sticks with chestnuts. A little spread of cider or grape juice, nuts, old-fashioned ginger cakes and candies on a white cloth, with candles for candle sticks, finishes the window.

How to Sell More Rice

Put a sample of Imperator coated rice in your window beside a sample of the ordinary rice loaded with starch and glucose, use a placard telling the difference, and see yourself sell rice.

Nobody who once tries Imperator fancy head rice will ever willingly go back to the coated. You have an irresistible talking point which cannot fail to mean larger sales.

This Tells the Tale

A product which has been on the market fifty-eight years is a product which has stood the hardest of all tests—the test of time. "Knight's Cooking Extracts" is a phrase familiar to man, woman and child, from the Atlantic to the Pacific and from the Lakes to the Gulf. It is easy to tell why; no housewife ever had a bottle go back on her and no housewife ever will. Good extracts must be on your shelves. Grocers, if you sell Knight's Extracts we need say nothing more to you; if you don't, we want one order from you—we are sure of more. You are certain of their absolute purity and a good profit.

334.—Ask to Be Shown When a Debtor Offers Less Than 100 Per Cent.

I feel like emphasizing in this article the importance of a fight which the National Credit Men's Association is making to induce creditors to act a little more stiff-backed in considering offers of settlement from embarrassed debtors. The association contends that a constant series of bad frauds are being perpetrated by alleged bankrupts or financially embarrassed business people, right under the noses of their creditors, merely because the latter are too ready to accept almost any offer that is made.

In writing on the subject the association says:—

When a business man becomes financially embarrassed, and offers a certain percentage in settlement, if a creditor holds back and begins to show signs of wanting to know a little about the case, the reply is apt to be to the effect that he is the only creditor who hasn't come in, that he is showing a very unco-operative spirit, or else there is a hint that he is holding out for a preferential payment. The idea clearly is to stampede the creditor into an acceptance of the offer through sharp criticism to the effect that he is playing the part of an obstructionist. To such tactics most creditors are weak-kneed enough to capitulate.

The association cites a case where a debtor, as late as last January, gave his creditors a statement of assets and liabilities which showed ownership of two pieces of valuable real estate. A few months later, this man sent out notices to his creditors that he was financially embarrassed and offered a certain percentage in compromise. He accompanied it with a statement of assets and liabilities, but the former this time contained no real estate. One of the creditors wanted to know where it had gone, but the other creditors cried him down because he was threatening a fight which would tie the thing up, eat up the funds, and delay settlement. He persisted for a little, but was finally overborne, and the mystery of the missing real estate was never solved. Very likely it had been manipulated in some way which would not have stood the test of an investigation—if only some one had been man enough to make it. Had it been recovered, the percentage of settlement would have been about doubled, but the creditors believed the bird in the hand to be worth the two in the bush.

If a few more creditors would be slower to accept the first offer of settlement made them by embarrassed debtors, bankruptcy and insolvent business frauds would probably be reduced one-half in a very short while. Debtors have grown astonishingly bold, so confident are they that creditors will gladly and gratefully take whatever is offered them and ask no questions.

Let me cite a few cases from my own experience, and from the records, to show how this works:—

A retail hardware dealer became embarrassed and called a meeting of his creditors. His assets were about $6,000 and his liabilities over $12,000. The assets had to be scaled down because book accounts were a part of them. The hardware dealer offered 35 per cent. in full, payable in cash. Practically all the creditors favored taking it, after the manner of creditors. One fairly large creditor held off and the bankrupt began to talk about going into bankruptcy, and the expense and the fees of that, and so on, until the other creditors actually began to get indignant at the obstructionist, as they considered him. He persisted, however, and to make a long story short, the investigation that ensued unearthed the fact that the hardware dealer owned a share in a prosperous hotel business, which, of course by oversight he had neglected to list among his assets. The percentage of settlement was finally 55 per cent. instead of 35.

In another case a wholesale grocer offered his creditors 50 per cent., professing that in order to offer even that, he had had to borrow from his wife. It would have gone through with a rush had not two of the creditors been a little suspicious. They insisted on being shown and finally the wholesale grocer was compelled to admit that he, or somebody for him—the thickest kind of a subterfuge had been used—held a block of stock in a chain of retail stores. When they were added to his assets the man proved to be solvent and he promptly arranged to pay in full. The creditors got out of about forty who all that had the courage of their convictions here. The rest were afraid something would happen and reduce the 50 per cent. they had been offered, that they were impatient with the two who stood out.

In a third case, one creditor of quite a number insisted that item of "stock on hand" which the debtor had included in a statement on which he based an offer of 50 per cent., was suspiciously small. He presented good reasons for his opinion, but the other cred-

Possible Cases Under New Pennsylvania Workmen's Compensation Act

Becomes Operative Next January 1st, and Makes all Retail Merchants Within the State Liable for Accidents to Their Employees While Latter are at Work.

[Inasmuch as the new Pennsylvania Workmen's Compensation Law which becomes operative next January 1st, affects every grocer and general storekeeper within the State, the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" will publish from time to time some possible cases which may arise under it, in the experience of the average grocer or general storekeeper. A full digest of the act was published in the issue of July 26th last. Readers hereof will remember that it practically makes it compulsory for employers to pay damages to employees who meet with accidents in the course of their regular work.—Ed.]

Possible Case No. 5.

Brown & Jones are wholesale grocers doing business in Philadelphia. They employ traveling salesmen, one of them William Smith, who covers the territory around Lancaster, Pa. Smith is married and has five children. He is out on one of his regular trips, and in the course of it goes into a customer's store. While in the act of taking the customer's order, a portion of the ceiling collapses under the weight of a safe on the floor above and the safe falls directly on Smith, who is instantly killed.

Under the act Brown & Jones, though before the act passed they would not have been in the least responsible, must now pay damages to Smith's family, for the act covers accidents happening to employees in the course of their employment even though not on the employer's premises. As there are five children the compensation would be 60 per cent. of his wages for 300 weeks, unless some of the children reach the age of sixteen before that time. Here a question will arise, for no answer is given in the act: What were Smith's "wages"? He was not on salary but was paid a commission, of course varied. The only employees spoken of in the act are those who receive regular wages, but it is not to be supposed for an instant that there was intent to exclude those employees on commission or percentage. Shall Smith's "wages" be determined?

If Smith's average income was $30 per week, the accident would cost his employers, or their insurance company, the approximate sum of $4,500.

practically all anxious to accept the 40 per cent. and get out. In the other cases, they looked for the one man who held out as an exception. The one man persisted, however, and finally made the offer to disgorge $4,000 of goods which he had "sold" to another.

There are quite a number of such cases, but cases which don't happen in this way are of course much more numerous. I heard a bankruptcy lawyer not long ago offer to make a wager that he could induce the creditors of any solvent debtor to accept settlement of around 50 per cent. merely by writing one letter. Perhaps it was exaggerated, but not necessarily a great deal. In such cases I have no doubt it could be done.

The creditor when offered a percentage settlement by a debtor, should not be too quick to accept. It is remarkable how many such settlements are increased merely by the creditors holding off. It will be a benefit not only to one's self, but to the whole cause of commercial honor, if a creditor will insist on being shown before he accepts any settlement of less than 100 per cent.

Advertising Matter Must Be Pretty Good to Get Retailers' Attention.

Contributor Tells of Interview with a Retailer Who Passes Almost Everything Up Because It Was Mostly About Free Deals.

Once asked a grocer in a little town of about two thousand people to give me all the literature which he received from manufacturers and jobbers. He said he would, because "it was just as easy to put it in a drawer for me as in a waste basket."

When I went to his store a week later he handed me a bunch of literature, ranging from a poorly mimeographed jobber's bulletin to an elaborate folder featuring oil pumps. I asked him if there was anything particularly interesting in the lot. "I haven't looked at them," he said. "That is, I haven't looked at any but the oil pump circular, and those fellows evidently took me for a garage. I don't sell any oil, except kerosene, and not much of that."

Passing up the subject of oil pumps for the moment, I asked him why he hadn't read the other literature. His answer was very significant—he never looked at circulars or letters from manufacturers of grocery products "because they were nothing but free deals." The oil pump folder he had looked at because it showed on the outside that it referred to no item of his regular stock, and because it was distinctive in its get up.

He told me that there was no money in the grocery business. His store had kept his nose to the grindstone for eight years and he hadn't anything to show for it. He admitted that he would rather sell advertised brands, provided there was an equal profit in them, because "people seem to know about them."

I looked through the assortment of literature he had handed me. There was nothing worth commenting upon. Fourteen out of the eighteen pieces embodied the "free deal" in some shape or form—either free goods or free display racks or premiums for clerks and proprietors.

The co-operation which a national advertiser offers to his small retailers must represent real help to them if it is to survive in the battle against the waste basket and accomplish the purpose expected of it.

Dry Goods Business Better Than for Two Years.

Marshall Field & Co., in their weekly review of the dry goods trade, say:—

Current wholesale distribution of dry goods shows considerable increase over the corresponding periods of the past two years.

Buyers continue to come to market in much larger numbers.

Collections are about normal.

The cotton market is strong, with continued advances, and the trade in domestic cotton cloths is fairly active. The raw silk market has also shown considerable advance during the week and still has a strong upward tendency. Finishers of cotton and silk goods have advanced their prices considerably the last few days.

The Package Sells the Bread

You Sell Both Let's Make More Money Together

You've got a store where people come. We've got something more people will come for—and come for oftener.

Something you would have been making more money out of all these years if you had been given half a chance. If you don't make more money out of raisins now it will be your fault, for we are giving you a chance which grocers have never had before.

Raisins Have Never Had a Chance

Raisins have been left to shift pretty much for themselves. No one has ever had much to say about them. Now, for the first time in history, we are talking about them in a big, national, convincing way. We have already stirred up the country over them. We have made hundreds of thousands of new raisin users; we will make millions more before we get through. And we have made old raisin users use more raisins.

They Are Having It Now

We have done this with Sun-Maid (Package) Raisins, and California Raisin Bread—made with Sun-Maid Raisins, after our own recipe. We have done it by talking about this new raisin bread and the luscious, sun-cured product of California with which it is made, in a new, compelling way, in full pages in the Saturday Evening Post, the Ladies' Home Journal, and in local campaigns in connection with grocers and bakers everywhere. And we are going to keep on doing it—we have just begun.

Let's Work This Chance Together

This is helping both of us. It is helping us by increasing the consumption of raisins, in bread and out of it, and it is helping you by putting new life into two of your lines—by making raisin bread sell package goods, and by making package goods sell raisin bread. You are bound to get something out of it in any event; but you cannot make the most of this chance in your business, unless you identify yourself with Sun-Maid Raisins and California Raisin Bread—unless you sell them both, and make each one sell the other. We'll be glad to tell you how we can help you to increase your profits with this double-barreled chance, if you will send us the attached coupon, asking for full particulars. We urge you, for your sake, to send it at once. Don't trail on raisins, now that they have started at last.

I have several letters asking advice on various points which I shall take up and answer this week, not only for the information of the correspondents themselves, but also of the other readers of this department. I have not the space to reproduce the letters, but will indicate their contents.

R. O. Masterson, of York, Pa., wants to know whether it would pay him to take a correspondence course in advertising. He is a clerk and wants to perfect himself in advertising. Thinks he has some talent in that direction and sends along a sample advertisement. I think he has too, and I believe a course in advertising would help him, particularly in the technical end of it. Apparently he doesn't know how to lay out an advertisement—how to plan the typographical part—the heads, and the border and so on. The appearance, in a word. That is extremely important, for it is the thing that gets the advertisement seen. A good correspondence school will give him that. Another good plan of getting training in advertising construction is to go to an expert advertising writer—a man holding a position so good as to make you sure he must be able to do good work, and get him to criticise your efforts. Write some advertisements and have them set as you think they should be, and then tell him to tear them apart. He will show you where the text could be improved, and very likely the general appearance. This is not so well-rounded a training as a good correspondence course could give you, but if you can get hold of the right man, it will within its limitations be better than a correspondence course.

B. R. Johnson, of Jennings, N. J., asks whether I think he could make anything out of a mail-order business, and what advertising mediums to use. It depends on whether he has anything to advertise by mail. I judge he lives in a small country village, and he might be able to get hold of something that would go. Sausage or scrapple, or a gilt-edged brand of butter or eggs, or something home-made. I remember a grocer in Oxford, Pa., who used to do a large mail-order business in Pennsylvania scrapple. I haven't seen any of his advertising lately and don't know what has become of his scheme, but I know it succeeded at one time. A mail-order advertising scheme will not go unless you are offering something which the people to whom you are advertising can't get so well—or think they can't—at their own stores. Something different, or something better. If you can dig up something like that it ought to go if you do the right sort of advertising in the right sort of papers. My judgment is that to begin with, your advertising ought to be done in papers within fifty miles of your town.

E. N. Bunting, of Albany, N. Y., says he did advertising regularly for five years, and then stopped all advertising and for the last five years he hasn't spent a cent for advertising of any kind. His business did not fall off during the second five years; in fact it went ahead a little. He asks whether that does not prove that advertising does not pay him. It certainly proves that the kind of advertising he did didn't pay him, but it by no means proves that he could not be helped by the right sort of advertising. I can express no opinion as to what ailed his advertising, if anything ailed it, because he does not send any in. But he can rest assured that if after advertising for five years, his business went ahead just the same when he stopped it, he was doing the wrong sort of advertising. If his advertising had made any impression at all, he would surely have noticed something when he stopped it.

NOTE.—This department is devoted to the criticism of advertising matter sent in, to the devising of new advertising ideas for special occasions, upon request, and to the suggesting of original advertisements when data is supplied. All communications sent for this Department should be addressed to the Editor of Science of Advertising. They will be taken up in strict rotation.

National Retail Grocers' Association Fights Parcel Post Extension.

The National Retail Grocers' Association through its secretary, John J. Ryan, has issued the following to retail secretaries all over the United States, regarding the coming effort to extend parcels post:—

Dear Brother Secretary:—Every retail grocer will be interested in the efforts the Postal Progress League is making to secure an extension of parcels post to one rate for the entire country, as explained in Leaflet No. 266, issued by the National One-Cent Letter Postage Association.

In our opinion the only way to prevent such a bill is to assist the association in its fight to compel each class of mail to pay the cost of its service for this, and this alone will prevent any further reduction in parcel post rates.

We are permitted by the Letter Postage Association to authorize you to offer free membership in that organization to any of your members with your compliments, and if you will promptly have your members each sign one of the enclosed complimentary membership blanks and mail same to Mr. M. Intosh, in stamped envelope enclosed, his association will send free 500 stamps to each, together with other literature, and will continue to furnish the same free any quantity.

Won't you please attend to this promptly and thus without any expense to our association or members assist in this movement in our interest? Very sincerely,

Selling Talks With Clerks

BY A MAN WHO HAS BEEN ONE

Conducted by W. E. SWEENEY, Manager for L. Lehman & Co.'s Department Food Store, Dover, N. J.

At the Butter Counter.—If you handle butterine and sell any reasonable amount of it, you must often have been struck with one funny phase of human nature. It's the apologetic air that is often assumed in calling for this article. At times it has reminded the writer of the old days when he had charge of the liquor department.

Now, any butter clerk who uses common business sense can dignify the butterine end of his department. It should be talked right out openly the same as any other legitimate article. It was the "interests" who succeeded in putting a stigma on it and it was Wiley and his able assistants who called it off.

It's some problem for the wife of a workingman to-day to fill the stomachs of, say, six hungry kids at three settings. The butter end is a big item and it is your duty to keep that item down by pushing your 25-cent tub butterine. Not altogether because your customer may be poor, but because it is a good business proposition from your standpoint as well as hers. We used to think that handling butterine cheapened this department. Not a bit of it. It made it more popular and positively increased sales and profits.

It's progressive. It's meeting public demand, and this is what a live firm must do to keep "live."

Keep Your Coffee in Sight.—A few days after that the coffee dropped into one of the Ginter shelves in this busy store right before the front counter were packed pound bags of coffee, and I think as well.

If you want to keep your coffee business up and over, place the good attractive bags constantly before you. If you are not carrying your own specially named brands, suggest it to your employer. These bags may be had at a very reasonable price, and there is practically no limit to the beauty of sign and variety of color for your selection.

Even throughout the late depression the firm who stuck to this shelf showed a big increase in coffee over the previous two years.

Foreign goods and fancy bottles very pretty and all that—they're expensive, to be sure, and no doubt a tone to a store, but "tone" doesn't do the trick when the yearly balance is struck off, and it's only your fancy grocer who can afford to put prominent things of luxury.

One Week More for the Window Display Contest—Ready?

The awards in the Window Display Contest of Lipton Teas will be made as soon after November 1st as is practicable. The contest closes that day. You have barely three weeks more.

The contest is for the five best window displays of Lipton's Tea. The "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" will give to the five retail dealers who make the most attractive window displays of Lipton's Tea before the end of this contest, the following cash prizes:—

For the Best	-	-	-	-	$75
For the Second	-	-	-	-	$50
For the Third	-	-	-	-	$25
For the Fourth	-	-	-	-	$15
For the Fifth	-	-	-	-	$10

CONDITIONS:

1. The display entered in the contest must be of Lipton's Tea alone.
2. The display must remain in the window one week.
3. Each contestant must send to this office a photograph of his display or a careful detailed description of it. Naturally a picture would be better, though a contestant need not incur that expense if he does not wish to. Almost every family now has a kodak-user in it who could photograph a window display.
4. Each contestant if he decides to enter the contest, will kindly drop this office a postal card to that effect.
5. The contest closes November 1, 1915.

The Subscribers' Bargain List

Have you got any goods you don't want? Anything—canned goods, groceries, hardware, dry goods, anything at all that's in good condition, but won't sell for you.

If you will make a price on it we can probably sell it for you in a hurry. Write us about it, stating the quantity, condition and your best price. You might give the original cost, too. We will give it a key number and offer it to our 4,000 subscribers. Your name will not appear unless you want it to. All sales ought to be on a cash basis.

The point is that what won't sell for you may be in everyday demand for somebody else, who will be glad to get your stock of it at a bargain.

There will be no charge for this service anywhere—we do it to help along.

Two Hundred "Turnovers" a Year

Two hundred times a year you turn over capital invested in

Fleischmann's Yeast—

that's about an average.

True, the amount involved is small but the principle is profitable and there's not one cent's worth of dead stock, waste, or loss to figure.

Don't Make This Mistake

If you don't handle Wheatena, don't put it down as "just another of those breakfast foods." Wheatena is as different from the others as tea is different from coffee. If it wasn't it wouldn't sell as it does, for we spend one dollar in advertising where the others spend ten.

Wheatena is the hearts of fine wheat, prepared as no one else could do it. Guaranteed without limit to everybody.

Bought Simply Because She Liked the Glass Package

It's odd what little things make sales sometimes. A grocer told us the other day that the day before a woman had bought a jar of Croft's Swiss Milk Cocoa simply because she liked the novelty of the glass package. She didn't ask any questions about the peculiar characteristics of the cocoa; she liked the glass jar and bought.

There is a point in that for grocers who study the public—the useful novelty is usually the seller.

Croft's Swiss Milk Cocoa, the only cocoa packed in glass, has a smoother flavor than any other cocoa made. That is because our exclusive process of making takes out certain substances that other manufacturers leave in.

Will you mention the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" when you write?

This Co-operative Buying Scheme Is Asking Retailers to Buy Its Stock—Is It a Good Investment?

The "Brite Mawnin Corporation" is the Parent Company with Headquarters in Chicago. Organizes Groups of Retailers in Different Sections to Handle Goods Co-operatively. Scheme Discussed as an Investment. L. L. Creasey Prime Mover.

The following letter opened up something which proved interesting:—

Fargo, N. D., October 20, 1915.
To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—As a subscriber to your journal, we are writing to find out what you can tell us about the Twin City Wholesale Grocery Co., St. Paul, Minn. This is supposed to be one of the combination of 12 wholesale houses, organized by L. L. Creasey, of Chicago, Ill. Kindly give us your opinion about this house and its plans, and would you advise a merchant to buy $300 worth of stock, to buy from them?

Yours truly,
CHAS. ROSE.

The Twin City Wholesale Grocery Co. of St. Paul, Minn., proved to be one of a chain of wholesale houses which are practically co-operative buying concerns run by retailers. There are twelve houses in the chain, as follows: The L. C. Mercantile Co., 1812 S. Clark street, Chicago; the Twin City Wholesale Grocery Co., 409 Sibley street, St. Paul, Minn.; Nebraska and Iowa Mercantile Co., 1315 Howard street, Omaha, Neb.; the Fritz Raymond Mercantile Co., Louisville, Ky.; the Tri-City Wholesale Grocery Co., 208 E. Front street, Davenport, Iowa; the Merchants' Grocery Co., 1030 Extension Main street, Evansville, Ind.; the International Grocery Co., 458 S. Meridian street, Indianapolis, Ind.; the Merchants' Coffee Co., 1114 W. Main street, Louisville, Ky.; the Peoria Wholesale Grocery Co., 918 S. Adams street, Peoria, Ill.; Ohio Valley Grocery Co., Louisville, Ky.; Interstate Grocery Co., 501 Ohio street, Cairo, Ill.; the National Grocery Co., 720 W. Main street, Louisville, Ky. Each of these concerns has a resident manager and a Board of Directors. Some of these are not rated by the mercantile agencies, while others are.

The prime mover in the scheme is L. L. Creasey, 938 Hearst Building, Chicago, who is not rated in the mercantile agency books. We have never heard of him. He has organized "the Brite Mawnin Corporation," with headquarters in Chicago, whose business it is to form the retail co-operative branches and sell to them. The capital stock of the Brite Mawnin Corporation is $500,000 in 8 per cent. preferred stock and $500,000 in common. Shares are $25 each. Mr. Creasey writes us about the scheme, and sends a copy of the by-laws. There is nothing especially illuminating about them. They first provide for the formation of the corporation and the issuance of stock, and give L. L. Creasey, the organizer, half of one per cent. of the annual gross sales of the corporation, plus traveling and hotel expenses. If Creasey can do a million a year of co-operative business, his commissions will be $5,000.

It is provided that the corporation shall sell to its stockholders "merchandise which it may carry in stock at cost, and add such per cent. as it may be deemed necessary to pay the expenses incident to the management and operation of its said business." This actually promises very little. It only agrees to sell such goods as "it may carry in stock," and only those at cost plus what is deemed enough to pay expenses. The corporation might be conducted under such heavy expense that the retailer could save nothing by buying from it. No stockholder who does not own four shares of stock can buy goods. The corporation will also "manufacture such items as may be in demand." The Brite Mawnin Corporation is not rated.

The amount of credit extended to a stockholder will not exceed the value of his stock unless he pays cash for the balance. Credit is extended for ten days only.

The plan is very simple and there is really nothing new in it. The Brite Mawnin Corporation is the parent company. It will deal in groceries and general merchandise. Groups of retailers will be organized in various sections to do a wholesale business, distributing goods to their own members and to any other retailers who will become members. The parent company sells to these groups.

As to whether the scheme offers a good investment, it might and it might not. Decidedly, it would be a chance. Of course the 8 per cent preferred dividend will be paid only if earned; there is no security for it. It can't be earned by selling staple goods at cost plus expenses; therefore it must be earned if at all, from the manufacturing end of the business, which is considerable of an uncertainty, we should say.

Philadelphia Retail Grocers' Association Holds Annual Fall Opening With About 2000 People.

Gives Striking Illustration of Scope of Plans it is Operating for Improvement of Local Retail Grocers' Condition. Food Show, Lunch and Addresses at Bourse Last Monday Evening.

The Philadelphia Retail Grocers' Association gave a most convincing illustration, at the Bourse last Monday evening, of its extensive plans for the betterment of the condition of the retail grocer in Philadelphia. Every retailer in Philadelphia was invited to attend the annual fall opening and about 2,000, many with their wives, did so.

There was music on the first floor, a buffet lunch upstairs, and a Food Show in the main rooms of the association. The following exhibited:—

The Ekenberg Co., with Teco Pancake Flour; Armour & Co.'s products, Postum Cereal Co., New England Supply Co., dried beef, bacon, cheeses; T. A. Snider Preserve Co.'s products; Franco-American Soup Co., Kennedy Creamery Co., Hecker's Flap-Jack Flour, Libby, McNeil & Libby, Quaker Oats Co., Hershey Chocolate Co., Minute Tapioca Co., P. F. Brown & Co., F. E. Morrison & Co., chocolate pudding; Loose-Wiles Biscuit Co., Curtice Brothers, Chama Mills Coffee, Lamont-Corliss & Co., Kneipp's coffee; Ross Biscuit Co., McLaren's Cheese, B. Fischer & Co.

The main event of the evening was an address on "Business Efficiency" by Prof. Calvin O. Althouse, head of the Department of Commerce, Philadelphia Central High School. He held the large audience for over an hour. For of Mr. Althouse's family are grocers and he formerly drove a grocery wagon himself, so that speaks with some practical knowledge.

Mr. Althouse talked somewhat past and present methods. In opinion personality is the basis of success. He thinks that a grocer in establishing a store should consider the neighborhood with regard to the kind of people he will have for customers; whether he will like the ways and manners enough to be in turn liked by his prospective customers. For instance, Germantown folks are different from those in West Philadelphia, Frankford or Kensington, and where one man would succeed, another would fail. The atmosphere of a store gets to be liked and will hold customers as much as bargain offerings and such things, if a man is in the right place. Small things are important and lay the foundation for big things. Thomas Martindale's success illustrates this principle. Mr. Martindale goes on long hunting trips with knowledge that everything will along well without him, for trade is established and his business well organized.

Coffee Men Will Fight Against Criticisms of Coffee Manufacturers in Advertising of Coffee Substitutes.

Three Well-known Western Coffee Houses File Protests With Federal Trade Commission on the Ground That Such Statements Constitute Unfair Competition.

Special Correspondence of "Modern Merchant and Grocery World."

Washington, D. C.,

October 28, 1915

Three well-known western coffee houses, S. Wedeles Co., Sprague, Warner Co. and Bell, Conrad & Co., filed protests with the Federal Trade Commission at some of the advertisements of coffee substitutes. According to the coffee men these statements place coffee in a false light before the public and thus constitute unfair competition under the Federal Commission. The Commission has not yet decided what it proposed to do in the matter.

Why a Manufacturer Should Be Permitted to Fix the Retail Price of His Product.

Views of Various Believers in This Doctrine Who Offer Them as Arguments for the Pending Stevens Bill.

[The "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" has obtained and will from time to time present a series of statements by various well-known persons who believe that the manufacturer should have the right to tell the retailer what price he must get for the manufacturer's product. All of the views which will be presented can be taken as arguments for the pending Stevens Bill, which seeks to give a manufacturer that right.—Ed.]

No. 5.—By Jacob Rehfuß, of the National Association of Retail Druggists.

I will cite the products of the well-known firm of Colgate Co., because we are all familiar with the goods they manufacture. The Colgate Co. has a sort of contract; not a written contract, but an unwritten contract, by which every dealer, be he druggist or grocer, chain-store man, or any other dealer, who sells the Colgate products, must not sell them below a minimum price; that is, maintain a minimum price, which is practically establishing a retail price. The profit which the minimum price they set will afford, in most cases, amounts to about 25 per cent., running sometimes as much as $33\frac{1}{3}$ per cent.; as a consequence, Colgate's goods have increased in popularity, and druggists throughout the land are glad to handle them.

Their talcum powder, in particular, is exceedingly popular. Druggists push it, oftentimes to the exclusion of their own brands. Personally speaking, for myself, and for many of my colleagues, I will say that we do not even put up our own brand, chiefly because the profit on the Colgate product is satisfactory.

Then, on the other hand, take the case of the Mennen's talcum powder, the retail price of which is not protected. The sale of Mennen's powder amounts relatively to nil, because the profit has been reduced to a point where we can not sell it and make even a penny profit.

You must recognize these facts in considering the condition of retail business. You have to start with the assumption that the retailer is not a pirate; he is conducting a legitimate business, and the cost of carrying on a retail drug business—and I speak of that because I know about that—the cost of carrying on a retail drug business is approximately 24 per cent. If we sell Mennen's talcum powder at no profit and it costs us 24 per cent to sell it, we have to make up the difference on something else.

For years the retail drug trade of this country has been the victim of price-cutting. We were the first to suffer from it. The city drug store has felt this thing for 15 or 20 years. The country drug stores did not feel it because they had no large department stores in competition with them. Recently, however, the country drug store has felt the effect of this unfair method of competition by reason of the encroachment of the mail-order houses, and the country druggists have joined the city druggists in our cry for price maintenance that will enable us to do business on the square, with a fair profit on everything.

Follow this a little further along. The city druggist, on the other hand, had it on his country druggist friends because the city drug store had greater opportunities to expand into other lines of business, and as a consequence the city drug stores sell Ingersoll watches, bath robes, bathing caps, kodaks and things of that sort, while the country druggist cannot do this because there are merchants in the country specializing in every line of business, and so the country druggist has not the same opportunity to extend his business which his brother in the city enjoys.

So now, it is the small man in the small town who is crying loudest for this reform, along with the city druggists. That explains our position, so far as our self-interest is concerned, and if we were not self-interested in this proposition, probably we would not be contending for this kind of a bill. We simply have to have profit enough to conduct our business, or else we can not get along.

War Food Prices in Norway.

A salted herring costs the Stavanger housewife five times as much to-day as it did in July, 1914, before the European war began. Flour, salt and syrup cost twice as much as before; meat a third more. Coal has advanced more than one-half and coke has doubled in price. Ordinary clothing costs from 10 to 15 per cent. more than formerly, while Norwegian wool, which is raised in great quantities in this district, has nearly doubled in price. The price of lamb last year ranged from about $0.12 to $0.146 a pound, according to quality. Now it ranges from $0.17 to $0.195. Rye, which is the most commonly used flour for bread making in Stavanger, was $0.022 a pound last year, but now $0.048. Wheat flour has gone from $0.03 to $0.051 and oatmeal $0.029 to $0.055 a pound. Coffee is practically the only staple article of general consumption which has changed in price during the war, a pound of chocolate or cacao $0.024 more to-day than it did in 1914. Sugar has advanced from $0.085 a pound, and would undoubtedly be higher if this had not been set at a maximum price by the Food Commission. Syrup has gone from $0.06 to 6 cents a pound, while salt has advanced from 12 to 24 cents per measure (18.16 quarts). Fresh fruit is always expensive in Stavanger and is so generally eaten as in America, apples, oranges, bananas, etc., being purchased by weight rather than by number. Prunes and raisins are much more generally eaten. These formerly ranged in price from $0.085 to $0.097, but now $0.146 a pound.

Little Sparks of Good Salesmanship

Some Extracts from a Talk on Efficiency in Selling Goods by the President of a School on Salesmanship and Business Efficiency.

[J. S. Knox, of the Knox School of Salesmanship and Business Efficiency, Cleveland, Ohio, made an address in Philadelphia last week under the auspices of a local business college. Some of his aphorisms on salesmanship and ways of succeeding and not succeeding in it appear below; they are worth reproducing.—Ed.]

Hugh Chalmers, former vice-president and general manager of the National Cash Register Co. and leading automobile manufacturer, keeps on a blackboard in his office the following characteristics of a successful salesman: Health, honesty, enthusiasm, initiative, interest, purpose, knowledge of the business, open-mindedness, tact, courage and industry. You'll notice that only one of these items directly refers to business; that all the rest are personal. But take enthusiasm; isn't that based on knowledge of the business; and interest; isn't that based on knowledge of the business?

"The mission of the salesman is to tell the truth, but to tell the truth effectively. That's the highest compliment he can pay his business."

"Initiative, Elbert Hubbard well defines as 'doing the thing that needs to be done without being told.'"

"Ninety per cent. of the men in America have no definite aim or ambition. They're like a ship in mid-ocean without a captain. Hugh Chalmers, when a salesman, failed to make enough the first ten days of the month to pay the month's expenses, and the result was to be put in bank. With a good mind, no opportunity is likely to be overlooked."

A big man was asked the secret of his success. "I defy you to ask me one question on my business which I cannot answer," he said, "that I cannot answer."

"Don't keep thinking: 'Is this a big job ready for me,' but 'Is this a big job ready for a big job?'"

"The biggest word in service is service. A good salesman is often selling services when he thinks he is selling his goods only. The prospective buyer may be weighing the value your services might be to him. A good many men don't even know how to sell their own services. I heard a man apply for a job and say: 'You don't want an extra man around here, do you?'"

"I made a study of the minds of salesmen behind the counter. At one time I entered a store and the clerk jumped on me. He thought I was a burglar, and ing, 'Something?' I told him a collar; paid 15 cents and he asked, 'That is all?' He chloroformed the idea that was in my mind to buy a shirt. I completely forgot it. It's a salesman's work to get you to think what you want." In another store the clerk suggested, "How about two; they're only for a quarter." You see he was on my side of the fence. A satisfactory sale is a mutually profitable interchange of values.

We must hand it to the German for succeeding where the American young man fails. In a store where the clerk was a German I stated my want, and without word the young man got down a box of collars, then he said, 'How many do you want? Four?' I was amused at this and asked him what prompted him to ask if I wanted four. He said he thought maybe it might not otherwise occur to me that I could use more than one. I bought two. 'Next time say eight,' he chuckled."

A woman told me that she went to Wanamaker's to buy a hat and was trying on one that was becoming when she was startled with a sales girl's saying, 'But that is rather expensive, perhaps you would rather look at these hats which are lower-priced.' The lady insulted and walked out without buying."

A salesman must study motives. He must be on the job to know whether it's the utility motive, or the vanity motive, or some other motive that is in the prospective buyer's mind. I read of a woman who bought an $8,000 muff. Do you think it would have been a salesman who understood human nature who would have suggested to her that black fox was very servicable? She was buying with the idea of outshining Mrs. So-and-so."

Look at the Little Blue Ribbon.

Look at that little blue ribbon in the advertisement in the California Fruit Canners' Association in this issue. It is the grand prize which the association won at the Panama Exposition for its Del Monte Brand. Not even defeated candidates for medals at the Panama Exposition have hinted that there was any graft there, so that this little blue ribbon means that the Del Monte canned goods were the best named goods shown at the Exposition. The point of this to you, Mr. Retailer, is that the best article in an entire exhibition is a good thing for you to feature.

WITH THE EDITOR

I have written, thought and spoken much on the efficiency of the trade press; how it can be increased and what its chief weaknesses are. A prime weakness of many trade papers, it has seemed to me, is the poor selection of the matter that goes in them—the editor's failure to ask himself the constant question: "Is this likely to be interesting, not to me, but to the subscriber?" This I have always called the "news sense," and it is worth its weight in gold in a large variety of ways.

It is not every trade paper editor who has the news sense developed to such exquisite fineness as the esteemed editor of the "Oregon Retailers' Journal," who prints the following letter in his last issue as news!:

Philadelphia, September 10, 1915.
"Oregon Retailers' Journal," Portland, Ore.

Gentlemen:—Referring to advertisement on page 15 of your August issue, we thank you very much for the very clear and appropriate manner in which this ad. is set up.

If it were no trouble we would appreciate very much having several additional proofs, which we would like to send to trade journals in other sections who use too much ornamentation in copy.

Thanking you for the courtesy, provided it makes no special inconvenience for your or your able printers, we are,

Yours very truly,
FELS & Co.

This has one thing to recommend it, at all events—it is not obscene.

It is curious to see England, by nature and training a free trade country, now imposing some of the highest tariffs ever imposed anywhere. For instance a shilling a pound (equivalent to 25 cents) on tea. McMeekin & Co., the London tea dealers, make the following comment upon it:—

Tea Duty is. Per Pound.—It is necessary to go back fully 50 years for such a rate as is now current. In 1865 the duty was fixed at 6d. per pound, and no further alteration was made for the long period of 25 years. Many changes have been considered necessary in the subsequent 25. It is too early yet to estimate the effect upon consumption. The liberal and wide diffusion of money amongst the working classes who are the chief consumers, the general agricultural prosperity, the spirit of patriotism and the reduced opportunities for the supply and consumption of alcoholic drinks, will all help to counteract any tendency towards a general reduction in consumption. With the very poor, of strictly limited means, there cannot fail to be some retrenchment. If the tea growers of the world continue progressively to increase the aggregate yield and produce in excess of the world's demand, they will, undoubtedly, help to ease the burden of taxation the consumer in this country has to pay through the domestic teapot.

War is an expensive luxury, and by a curious irony, its heaviest burden always falls on the people who don't want it.

Is it a good plan for the Pennsylvania Retail Merchants' Association to be dragged into politics in the way of recommending men for office that the members know little or nothing about? For instance the following postal has gone to all local secretaries during the week:—

Erie, Pa., October 25, 1915.

Dear Secretary:—Get a telegram off on Wednesday from your local association to the Governor at Harrisburg, Martin G. Brumbaugh, asking his appointment of Edgar F. Heffner, of Lock Haven, to the Public Service Commission. Those at the convention know what this means. Those absent do it anyway. Remember, Wednesday, October 27th, please.

A. M. HOWES,
Secretary.

Now Edgar F. Heffner may be the best man in Pennsylvania for this job and he may be the worst. Certainly some of the secretaries who are asked to endorse him will not know which. It is just possible that none may know which. Suppose they thus inadvertently endorse an utterly unfitted man—is the position of the organized retail merchant improved with the Governor of the State?

No organization ought to take a stand with one candidate unless it knows all about all the candidates.

Why should the grocers of Milwaukee, Wis., fight so hard to keep their stores open on Sunday?

Don't Know a Good Thing. November 1 there went into effect a new Wisconsin law closing groceries, delicatessen stores and meat markets. The grocers complain bitterly at this, and according to a news item in another column will seek to overthrow the law.

Isn't this very foolish? Have the retailers everything to gain nothing to lose by Sunday closing when they all close? How can they lose anything? John Jones may have no fear that if he closes, his competitor will stay open and his trade—the competitor will have to close also. It probably would be practical to go outside of Milwaukee to buy goods, so that the result of the act will be that consumers will not be able to buy groceries on Sunday any more. There will doubtless be inconvenience but why need the retailers care? Their customers will buy just as much, but they will buy it on Saturday, as most of them could easily do.

I suggest that the Milwaukee grocers don't know a good thing when they see it.

An Age of ——— Lying

After reading the advertisements of several of the department stores, one is compelled to conclude either that the age of miracles is still with us, and that the department stores are the greatest miracle-workers of all ages, or that they are the greatest liars that ever drew breath.

We are either in an age of wonder-working or an age of colossal falsehood.

The department stores, by the force of sheer genius, are either selling all kinds of merchandise far below its value, or they are not.

If they are not, they are plain liars; or not plain either, but rather fancy.

From last Sunday's Philadelphia papers I have had three little lists made of goods advertised in the page advertisements of Gimbel Bros., Snellenburg & Co. and Lit Bros., all local department stores. The prices and the "real values" given in the lists are those which appeared in the advertisements:—

Gimbel Brothers.

$21 for $29 Body Brussels rugs.
$16.50 for $30 baby coaches.
38 cents for 75-85-cent enameled ware.
Half price for china.
95 cents for $1.35 table damask.
$2.45 for 10 pounds 45-cent coffee.
$3 for $4 lace curtains.
$5.75 for $9.75 women's quilted robes.
$12.50 for $15 Ostermoor mattresses.

$3.95 for $6.90 women's waists.
$3.95 for $5.50 silk petticoats.
$1 for $2 women's houses dresses.
78 cents for $1 gloves.
$19.75 for women's $39.50 dresses.

Snellenburg's.

50 cents for women's $2-$3 hats.
15 cents for 35-60-cent ribbons.
$1.79 for $3 broadcloth.
29 cents for 50-cent crepe de chine.
25 cents for Lowney's $1.25 cook book.
$2.75 for $4.50 blankets.
15 cents for 50-cent ratine.
$248.75 for a $350 piano.
59 cents for 79-cent sheets.
$5.75 for boys' $9 suits.
$15.29 for $30 Axminster rugs.

Lit Brothers.

$12.75 for men's $15 and $18 suits.
47½ cents for 65-cent linoleum.
$37.50 for $75 Wilton rugs.
65 cents for 80-cent sheets.

$3.98 for $5 blankets.
59 cents for $1-$1.50 Smyth underwear.
$10.65 for $12.50 tables.
85 cents for $1.10 table damask.
$2.98 for $4 umbrellas.
59 cents for 80-cent galvanized tubs.
$7.49 for $13.50 gas domes.
$15 for women's $25-$30 suits.
$2.85 for men's $3.50-$5 shoes.
98 cents for $2 velvet gabardine.
$19.75 for women's $30 furs.
$6.95 for men's $10 suits.

Nothing in any of these advertisements was advertised as being merely good value for its price, except Victor talking machines, which prices are fixed by the manufacturer. Everything on so thing like five full newspaper pages was advertised as being sold at

History Repeats Itself

You know what happens every little while.

You have some sleepy staple lying upon your shelves waiting for the few people that know about it.

Suddenly somebody comes along and "shoots it off." He takes that staple, touches it up, makes it better, gives it a name, puts life into it, starts talking about it up and down the country, gets people to thinking about it in a new way, gets them to believe it is something they want after all—and presto!—it begins to sell.

It's Doing It Now

That is precisely what is happening to raisins now. We came along, took from the cream of the California crop, standardized it, gave it a good name—Sun-Maid Raisins—packed it in the sort of cartons people like, and began to talk about it, widely, convincingly, up and down the country. Talked about how good raisins are—particularly Sun-Maid Raisins—and how good they are for you. Talked about them by themselves, and especially as an element in California Raisin Bread, made with Sun-Maid Raisins after a remarkably good recipe.

See What Has Happened

We have created a new demand for two things you sell. We have made each one sell the other—California Raisin Bread sells Sun-Maid Raisins, and Sun-Maid Raisins sells California Raisin Bread. And you sell them both. Or you ought to. Grocers everywhere are doing it who sold scarcely any raisin bread before, and very few package goods. Raisins and raisin bread are coming into their own at last—all kinds of raisins, but especially Sun-Maid Raisins and California Raisin Bread—the kind we are spending $160,000 to talk about in the Saturday Evening Post and the Ladies' Home Journal and in local campaigns.

The Raisin Business Is Being Rebuilt

We don't know whether you realize what is happening. Things are moving pretty quickly. But we want you to. People in your town are going to get Sun-Maid Raisins and California Raisin Bread somewhere. We'd like to help you make them get them of you. We'll tell you how we do this—how we are doing it successfully for grocers all over the country—if you will send us the attached coupon. But you had better send it at once. Things are moving pretty rapidly, as we have said, and we don't like to see you get off to a slow start. Better write to-day—now—this minute—before you put the paper down.

cut price far below the regular price and the real value.

All alert department stores pick up some real bargains. Bankruptcy sales, business difficulties, goods rejected by other buyers for some reason not affecting their worth, their own odds and ends, and so on—all such goods can be honestly described as bargains, and can be legitimately exploited as selling below their real value. But the competition for this class of merchandise is enormous—it is bait par excellence and everybody wants it. There isn't enough of it to give any one store very much, and it is as certain as can be, that many of the goods advertised on these five pages of department store advertising—perhaps the most—were not of this class. The balance were reasonably sure to be rank frauds, overdescribed and overexaggerated.

There is nothing in this which is peculiar to Philadelphia. Every large city shows the same conditions. In Pennsylvania, in New York, and in several other States, there is an advertising law which would instantly stop it if anybody had interest enough to enforce it. Don't think that consumers, surfeited by this sort of thing, are not affected by it. They are affected by it. Though stung a hundred times, hope ever springs eternal that the one hundred and first bargain will be real.

Dry Goods Business Continues Healthy.

Marshall Field & Co., in their weekly review of the dry goods trade, say:—

Current wholesale distribution of dry goods continues to show a healthy gain over the corresponding period of a year ago.

Mail orders and road sales are heavy for immediate delivery.

Customers continue to be in the market in much larger numbers.

Collections are above normal.

The advancing prices in many lines of cotton, wool and silk goods reflect the firmness and upward tendency of prices in primary markets.

surface. They figure it will require eleven gallons of paint. As a matter of fact this figures less than 200 square feet of actual painting surface to the gallon. Their price is $22 in Chicago for the job.

I have it on the word of the catalogue houses themselves that they don't know how to make paint, that is, good paint. They state that they are making their paints as good as they know how. The best they know how is a heavy percentage of barytes, water and other inferior ingredients. They say it requires fifteen gallons of paint to cover 1,800 square feet of surface three coats. That is about 100 square feet to the gallon, and they warn their customers against paying $2 or $2.50 a gallon, when they can buy it of them at $1.12. And yet at their figures on a house they are really getting $2 for their paints. The only way I can meet their price is by raising my price 25 cents a gallon, and if you will quit selling paints by the gallon, and sell them at the cost of painting and good service, there is nothing about this catalogue proposition that should bother you.

The thing that I want to emphasize is that in its advertising the mail-order house is continually guilty of misrepresentation. In the case of the kitchen cabinet, I took it up with the Senators and Representatives. The retail dealers haven't learned to throw those matters into politics and seek a remedy by law. That is another thing they are going to do. There are enough folks engaged in the business to secure a law that will bar from the mails this dishonest advertising. You know that to advertise a kitchen cabinet that costs $20 at $50 is dishonest.

In conclusion, I want to urge you to meet the catalogue house prices and to offer to pay half freight. I would like to see merchants take a page ad. in the local papers and repeat them once a month, using a smaller space. The whole matter simmers down to the matter of discrimination in price of advertising dishonestly by catalogue houses, of misrepresentation on their part as to values of things that the consumer is not wise enough posted to detect, and it is your duty to know this and point it out to them.

AMONG THE TRADE

The Frank A. Smith Co. has been appointed Eastern agents for the California Associated Raisin Co. This is a good tie-up on both sides.

George W. Bumm, wholesale salt dealer at 200 North Delaware avenue and an ex-president of the Salt Council, died on Monday at home, 827 North Twenty-fourth street, following a long illness. He was born in Kensington in 1841. In the salt business he succeeded his father, William Bumm, who had been in that line in Philadelphia for more than 50 years.

Thomas Martindale, the well-known grocer, hunter and public speaker, delivered the second of his lectures on hunting at Witherspoon Hall on Wednesday evening. The subject was "Hunting in Cook's Inlet, Alaska," and was a large and appreciative audience. Like the last lecture, this was illustrated by photographs. Mr. Martindale will publish a book on Alaska early in the spring of 1916.

Misrepresentations of the Mail Order Houses

Mr. Wildey Tells How They Have Built Up Their Enormous Business. The Paint and Grind Stone Fakes.

A retail merchant made the statement that part of the time he sold sugar below cost. When you were paying $4.50 for sugar, the catalogue houses were selling it at 33⅓ pounds for a dollar, or $3 a hundred, and claiming to make a profit. But they were selling it at $4.50 in hundred pound lots. Conceding that half of it is sold in that way, the average price would be $3.75 for sugar worth at the time from $3.50 to $3.60 at the seaboard. They could sell in that way and still make a profit out of the year's business. And yet they claim not to have lost money on sugar. In one case they were lying for the benefit of public consumption. In the other case they were telling the truth in private.

It is my plan to run through the catalogues and present my side of the story, and I think it is up to the dealer to show his customers the full truth in regard to these matters. It has been my method to advertise a matter like this and to call attention to the misrepresentations of the catalogue houses. A catalogue house recently made four claims as to a grindstone. They stated "Our price $2.90. Usual car lot price $3.25. Usual retail price $4.50. Our saving $1.60." Of these four claims three of them were wrong, and the only one of them that was true was that the catalogue house price was $2.90, and the fact that the price was in Chicago was not particularly emphasized by them.

I have found that it pays to show up these facts, not for the direct results, but for the indirect effects. There is probably not a dealer in this house who has been handling paints who has not been affected by the catalogue house prices. It is published in their catalogue that their house paint has a covering capacity of 250 square feet, and that is figured for a house with a more than plentiful supply of windows and doors. One is a figure on a 26 x 23, 22 feet high. This figures 2,600 square feet. There are 16 windows and 8 doors. Twenty-four windows and doors all told. After taking these out it leaves about 2,100 square feet of painting

The Week's One-Time Ads.

If any of you young gentlemen sell or want to sell bulk olives, bulk pickles, and any of that kind of stuff, look through this paper until you come to the ad. of the Koren Mfg. Co., Cleveland, Ohio, headed "Can't You See the Money to be Made From This?" That's the point of the interesting remarks I am about to make. There is one of the cleverest things advertised in that ad. I ever saw. Of course, everything that has an ad. in this paper is clever, but some are so. This Koren jar scheme will tell you if you'll stop a minute to think what you can do with it. Four or nine glass jars in a frame, one moving out separate from the others so you can get at it, all crammed up tight. You can set it anywhere, and it'll sell good as a tiger. I don't know what you've ever tried to do any of the bulk business, but there's plenty of money in it. JIMMY MANN Campaign Against Fraudulent Retail Advertising Begins with Advertising of Men's Furnishings. Big Increase in Home Beet Sugar Production. Currant Shortage Attracting Comment. Market Summary.

Special Correspondence of "Modern Merchant and Grocery World."

New York, October 29, 1915.

Another field manager for the National Retail Dry Goods Association has just returned to this city after a long trip covering thirty-one large cities. This was John T. Kirby, who states that while he was away he spoke to about 1,500 dry goods dealers on the question of the Stevens bill, allowing a manufacturer to fix the retail selling price. According to Mr. Kirby almost all of the 1,500 retailers whom he saw expressed an opinion adverse to the Stevens bill.

The Wholesale Men's Furnishings Association of the city has begun a campaign against fraudulent advertising under the law which has been in force in this city for several years, but which has practically not been enforced. The first case was brought against Abraham Goldstein, manager of a men's furnishing store at 1679 Broadway. He was arrested because he displayed in his show window a sign so worded as to convey the impression that he was selling Manhattan shirts at cut prices, whereas he carried no such shirts in stock.

There is a splendid field for the enforcement of the fraudulent advertising law in every line in this city.

The trade is beginning to be seriously concerned over the great shortage in the stocks of currants, which were expected to arrive here in time for the holiday trade. It is a fact that the markets of this country are now almost bare of currants. If shipments do not arrive from Greece, which is doubtful at this writing, there will be almost a famine in the country. The delicate position which Greece is now occupying as to the European war makes shipping facilities very uncertain. During the last month one steamer has arrived in New York with currants upon it and these were eaten up almost instantly. There is another boat due in this city shortly before the middle of November, but it is expected to arrive here too late for the Thanksgiving trade. Prices are higher than they have been for many years.

Messrs. Willet & Gray have published during the week a preliminary estimate of the new American beet sugar crop. It shows an expected yield for 1915-16 of 750,000 tons as against 646,257 tons in 1914-15. This is an increase of 16 per cent., which is very material. It makes the forthcoming crop the largest in the history of the business.

There was a conference of independent retailers of the Metropolitan district in the Hotel Astor on Thursday evening to consider the best plan of aiding the passage of the Stevens bill, eliminating the coupon as a trade factor, and preventing fraudulent advertising. There were about 300 retailers present and several addresses were made. No definite plan was decided upon. There will be other conferences.

SUMMARIZED MARKET CONDITIONS.

Tea quiet and unchanged. Coffee somewhat steady to firm.—Coffee somewhat firmer for the week, principally because options are a little firmer. Demand quiet. Prices show no radical change. Milds firm on large foreign demand.—Sugar about unchanged as to refined. Raws still firm.—New prunes show stronger feeling on the Coast with some holders asking a little more money. Spot prunes scarce and high. Big export business doing. Apricots firm on foreign demand. Currants very scarce and high. Raisins also firm and active.—Nutmegs active and firm.—Salmon unchanged; prices firm. Other canned fish show no change.—All canned vegetables moderately active.

Here is a store fitted with Baines' Brackets. Our word for it, there are at least 25 per cent. more goods on the shelves here than there can possibly be on the shelves of any similar store using the old style shelves. No crowding either.

The point about Baines' Brackets is that they hold up the shelves without uprights. That gives you the use of the whole unobstructed shelf length, and not only greatly improves the appearance of your stock, but gives you a place for at least one-fourth more goods.

The Shredded Wheat Biscuit Suit.

McDonald, Pa., Oct. 26, 1915.
To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—I read with interest your article regarding the suit of the Shredded Wheat Co. against the Ross Food Co. and am amazed to learn that the Ross biscuit has gained enough sale to justify the Shredded Wheat people to sue them.

Evidently the retail grocers have not taken the time to analyze the Ross proposition or they would not lend their aid to introduce an unknown article in an effort to keep a good seller which pays them the same profit. My idea of the Ross Food Co. is that if they will not allow the retailer a fair margin of profit when their article is practically unknown, that after the retailer has helped to introduce it and established a demand for it that they will hardly come across with a better price.

My advice to the retailers is not to take up any new article and in its introduction to the trade unless the profit justifies the extra effort required to create a demand for it. My intentions are not to champion the cause of the Shredded Wheat Co., as I think that if they would allow the retailer a little more profit on their products they would not need to fear competition as the retailer has about had a fill of introducing new breakfast foods and would be contented to stick to the established brands provided they allow a fair margin.

In my opinion there are enough 10-cent sellers costing 95 cents a dozen and 15-cent sellers at $1 per dozen without the retailer being inclined to introduce any new ones.

Would be pleased to have you take this matter up in your editorial; it may do us retailers some good.

Sincerely yours,
E. M. CHAMBERLAIN

Karo Moves Quickly From Your Shelves

You'll find KARO listed on a majority of the orders you receive and your customers ask for it because our advertising has taught them its many uses; while its purity and quality bring them back for more. KARO is easy to sell and the demand for it is increasing throughout the entire year. It moves so quickly and gives such perfect satisfaction to your customers that you will find KARO the most profitable syrup you can handle. Display the well known KARO cans where your customer can see them—you'll find it pays.

Besides its many other uses, KARO (Crystal White) is widely used for home preserving. It will pay you to speak of this to your customers, because KARO pays you more profit than sugar.

present. The meetings were held in the Town Hall and presided over by Charles M. Ketchum, secretary of the Washington Board of Trade. The morning session commenced at 10 A. M. with an address of welcome by Burge Morgan and G. G. Oliver. John Shaffer, of Charleroi, responded. The Ways and Means Committee was appointed and the convention was adjourned. Five-minute talks on organization by the visitors (one from each town) concluded the morning session. An afternoon journey to the Community House for a luncheon was then in order.

At the afternoon session Hon. Har R. Myers discussed "Legislation of Merchants." J. C. Norris, president of the State Association of Retail Merchants, spoke on "The Remedy." William Smedley spoke on "Credits and Collections." Charles M. Ketchum, spoke on the "Itinerant Vendor and Mail-Home Competition." "Dishonest and Unfair Competition" was discussed, and at the address a general discussion ensued on these topics. The afternoon session adjourned at 4.30 and group meetings of the various trades were held, of which came many recommendations. Dinner was then served, after which the convention reconvened and it was decided to form a permanent organization and a committee was appointed for that purpose. Charleroi was selected as the place for the next convention. Resolutions of thanks were passed to all who had contributed to the success of the meetings. The evening was given to sociability, a vaudeville show, a splendid concert, story telling and a talk by Stanley L. Krebs on "Business" wrapped up the day.

It was a big day. Great results followed. Washington paid all the expenses and was glad to do it. The "get together" spirit was there. It will develop. New associations will be formed. It was a meeting full of true missionary spirit.

Mr. Smedley addressed the merchants of Wellsboro on Monday, October 27th.

The Nanticoke merchants held a special meeting on October 28th. Organized by Smedley was there.

The Butchers' Protective Association of Pittsburgh is a live organization. Anything it attempts meets with success. Consequently the annual banquet at the Hotel Anderson on October 29th was no exception to this rule. Attendance which taxed the capacity of the main dining room stimulated the speakers to their best efforts. The menu was an elaborate one and a real souvenir of the occasion. Rees acted as toastmaster and addresses were made by Attorney Lacey on "Business Efficiency." Geo. McCall of Johnstown, on "Results;" Sec. J. Lansberry, of Homestead Credit Bureau, on "Credits," and Organized by Smedley on "Organization." Talks were also made by various members of the association. There was singing and it was a night of good fellowship.

The Grocery Markets

Tea.

The tea market shows no change for the week. Everything is steady to firm. News comes of continued rejections of Congous which, while they have had no particular effect upon the market as yet, are certain to do so soon. The consumptive demand for tea is fair.

Coffee.

There is a very fair demand for all grades of Rio and Santos coffees and as a result of that the market has been very slightly firmer and high for the week. There is no radical advance and probably will be none, for the reason that the supplies of coffee are so large that they will prevent this. Milds are still in good foreign demand and the line is firm on this account. Java and Mocha are unchanged and quiet.

Sugar.

The raw sugar market is not materially changed from a week ago. Some raws have been sold at 4.26 cents, which is about the price which has ruled for several days. Refined has advanced to the basis of 5.35 for granulated. There is no sign of any immediate further change, although of course the refiners, being in control of the market, may change it at any minute. The consumptive demand for sugar is very poor.

Syrup and Molasses.

Glucose remains unchanged for the week. Compound syrup in fair demand at unchanged prices. There is more sugar syrup being made now for the reason that prices are so high that it pays the refiners to give some attention to it. The prices for sugar syrup, however, are less than they were some time ago. Molasses is unchanged and quiet. Some of the Louisiana producers are quoting prices on new crop on a rather high basis.

Fish.

The situation in spot Norway mackerel is not improved. Stocks are exceedingly low and prices exceedingly high. For example, No. 1 Norways are offered to-day at $32 per barrel. This grade of fish ordinarily would not bring over $22, and new No. 1 Norways should be selling for around $27. Takers are few and far between and the business is almost at a standstill. There is some new Norway mackerel in Norway, but the quality is not good and American buyers are not willing to pay the enormous prices asked for such poor fish. Cod, hake and haddock are in fair demand, under the circumstances, at about a 1/2-cent advance. Salmon shows no change in any grade. Demand fair. Domestic sardines are unchanged and in light request. Imported sardines all very high, scarce and active.

Dried Fruits.

Prunes on spot continue scarce and high. No change for the week. On the coast the market is unchanged. Apricots continue high on good foreign demand. Domestic demand is fair. Holders of peaches predict an advance because they are very low indeed, and other dried fruits are relatively higher. They think this will turn the public attention to peaches. Raisins are in good demand. Seeded raisins are especially active, partly because packers are this year selling bulk seeded raisins at 1 cent a pound below the cartons. This has created an unusually good demand from independent packers and from bakers. Seedless raisins are scarce and very high. Currants are also in a critical condition, on account of short supplies. Arrivals of new currants are quite uncertain, and the market is merely nominal. Dates are ruling about the same as last year.

Beans and Peas.

Domestic pea beans are a shade higher for the week, due to continued scarcity. Marrows unchanged and firm. California limas are probably 25 cents a bushel higher, largely by reason of the fact that the congestion of freights in the West and the Panama Canal accident have made it necessary to pay 35 cents a 100 more for lima bean freights than was paid some time ago. Green and Scotch peas are firm and higher, especially Scotch, which are ruling at about $3.10 per bushel. Scarcity is the reason.

Butter.

The consumptive demand for butter has been good and the market is firm at an advance of 1 cent per pound on all grades. The make of butter is falling off to some extent, while the quality is unusually good for the season. Continued good consumptive demand indicated.

Eggs.

New-laid eggs continue very scarce and wanted, at an advance of 2 cents a dozen. The average receipts are strictly fancy. Storage eggs are all moving out fairly well at steady and unchanged prices.

Cheese.

The cheese market is firmer at a to 1 cent advance on all grades. The consumptive demand is about what ought to be for the season, and with the fact that there is not some export demand, this makes the market healthy throughout.

Canned Goods.

Tomatoes remain unchanged for the week. Practically all holders are asking 85 cents in a large way, f. o.

Do You Sell All the Rice You Could?

SOME people will always buy something new—it rests with the article whether they keep on buying it.

If you will show Imperator rice, which is different from the rice your customers may be used to, in that it is not coated with glucose and talc, a lot of them will buy it just because it is new to them. When they taste the difference between Imperator and ordinary rice they will keep on buying it.

It's a way to better rice sales.

Maryland 3s. Although the market is especially strong, the statistical is unmistakably strong. The of the Tri-State Packers' Association, which met in Delaware last shows the following figures covering the tomato pack in Maryland, and New Jersey in 1915-'14: 1913, 8,809,000; 1914, 7,963,000; 1915, 4,882,468. This is slightly more per cent. of last year's pack, and these are the principal packing States, to be seen what a deficit there is to be. The demand for tomatoes is dull. Corn shows no change the week; the market is thoroughly healthy because the supply is large. Deliveries of Maine corn range from 40 to 90 per cent. Prices are unchanged. Peas are unchanged and still to be heavy. Apples unchanged and quiet. California canned are heavy at unchanged prices. There is considerable surplus of lower grades, but not very much of the small Eastern staple goods show no change and light.

Provisions.

Pork, regular and skinback hams, together with bellies and bacon, are firm and unchanged, with a good consumption. Both pure and compound are also in good demand at unchanged prices. A fair demand is registered for barreled pork, canned meats and dried beef; all at unchanged prices.

We have noticed no arrivals of new and herrings as yet. Orders have been withheld principally because the in Holland are so enormously that it would hardly pay to import any of those Holland herrings. If this large catch which they expected in Holland has been realized, expect that prices will be somewhat in the near future. The weather is colder so that we may be able to import some. There is no change in the situation of h herrings. They are just as scarce as ever, and hardly any arrivals. Norway Herrings.—A rather large shipment has arrived, and in spite of prices have advanced, because the demand, in spite of the extraordinary prices asked for the goods is still good, and is likely to continue so, there is quite a scarcity of herrings. We have been unable to secure any Norway mackerel as yet, principally because the reason that our agents cable the quality is not very desirable, owing to the extraordinarily high prices in Norway, we are afraid to import these goods as long as the quality is first class. Of course, this has no effect on the remaining stocks of season's mackerel, which are now at advanced prices. The sardine situation remains unchanged and rather critical. Only very few lots of Portuguese sardines are being and they are usually sold, in oversold to arrive. There are no any sardines coming over now from Norway, for the simple reason asking prices are so abnormal that could not pay to import this commodity, so for this reason stocks of sardines here are gradually being cleared, and in the meanwhile we expect that the situation in Norway will be, that the catch of sardines will be summed and prices will at least be more reasonable, so that we shall be enabled to import and sell the goods at half-way reasonable prices.

Spices.

The market is very active, with large domestic needs and a good demand, especially for export. Many grades are out of supply here. This applies especially to black and red peppers, cloves and many seeds. The local consumption at present is very great. Freights, as we have advised before, are now in a more serious position than at any previous time since the war began. Indications, therefore, point to very high prices on many articles on the list.

Pepper.—Demand for all grades is large. Recent large shipments quickly taken up. In fact, the bulk of the goods was sold on arrival. White peppers have been in big demand and are slightly higher in price. All peppers are now firm, with every likelihood of going higher.

Red Peppers.—All grades have advanced sharply on account of shortage. There is little on hand and practically none in sight. Therefore, extreme prices are likely over the winter and early spring months.

Cloves.—Spot stocks have been cleared. Futures have advanced. The market is up fully 1½ cent over prices in effect last week.

Pimento (Allspice).—Quite firm and steady and in better demand.

Mace.—Is in large demand at present and a large part of the spot stock of fair goods has been disposed of. The visible future supply is small.

Nutmegs.—The demand is on the increase. Prices, however, are unchanged. The supply in sight is exceedingly small.

Cassias.—All grades of China bark are much higher. Batavia, while firm, are really unchanged.

Gingers.—Are in better demand. Prices are unchanged, except for Jamaicas, which are sharply higher.

Green Ginger Root.—Some little selling at this time. Season, however, is nearly over. Prices are now very low. McCormick & Co.

Standard Canned Goods.

Whenever there is a bull market in any line of merchandise, especially when the advance in prices has been continuous for a period of several months, there is almost sure to follow either a reaction or a "breathing spell" for a time long enough for the market in the different sections of the country to conform to the conditions prevailing at the primary sources of supply. The rapid advance in the prices of tomatoes this season has been continuous since July, without a reaction, even of the smallest proportion, which is almost unprecedented in that line of goods. A break in the market was confidently expected by the jobbers when the October crop came in, to the surprise of the buyers, there is no October crop of tomatoes this year, the canning season having ended with the month of September. Another remarkable thing about this season was the absence of the usual "glut periods," when the alert canner expects to make an output large enough to give him a surplus stock to cover his trade until the next canning season. It looks like the advanced prices have come to stay, but opportunities to pick up bargains may occur when least expected, and it behooves the jobbers to be watchful.

The buying of tomatoes eased up this week, and large orders were not in evidence, nor was the number of single carload orders increased. The shipments, however, were scattered over the same sections that have been steady buyers all along, showing that this market still continues to be the cheapest source of supply. The canners appear to be confident of the stability of the prices during the winter, the absence of the usual October crop giving them more courage. Now and then the same old reports crop up about heavy buying of tomatoes for export being made, or about to be made, but there is nothing doing in that direction. The demand for tomatoes in our own country this winter, or the lack of it, will govern the market prices, and that is in line with what we said this time last year.

Canned sweet potatoes were quite active again, especially in the Western markets. Last year's pack was practically sold out everywhere, which leaves an open market for the new goods, and the present price is certainly low enough to attract liberal buying. There was better buying of corn this week, and it was well-scattered. The low price and excellent quality of Baltimore spinach have helped the canners to do a larger business in it this season. The same is true of the high-class stringless beans, whole and cut beans, both green and white wax. In the other lines of vegetables there was nothing doing this week outside of the small orders coming in daily. These small orders, however, gradually make a dent in the largest stocks almost unnoticed until an upward movement is started.

Cove oysters are quiet; very little is doing in them. The fall canning season is at hand.

Milwaukee, Wis., Grocers Much Upset Over New Sunday Closing Law.

The last Wisconsin Legislature passed a law forbidding, under criminal statutes, groceries, delicatessen establishments or meat markets to remain open for business on Sunday. The law applies to "cities of the first class," of which Milwaukee is the only one in the State. The saloons are open without interference by the police. So the grocers are planning to fight the law, and if it is enforced against them to demand the closing of the saloons under the all-State law. However, the dealers affected are going to put the law to a legal test by remaining open on the first Sunday in November, this being decided at a meeting at which about 300 were present. The permanent organization, which will be effected before the law goes into effect, will defray the expenses of the person put on trial by the State, if an arrest is made. If they lose their test they are determined to close saloons and motion picture shows in Milwaukee.

Association of Hawaiian Pineapple Packers Offers $8,000 in Prizes.

The big campaign is under way, involving 1,006 prizes for best window displays featuring Hawaiian canned pineapple. This is a splendid opportunity for merchants to increase their profits through increased sales, at the same time getting liberal prices.

No progressive grocer should miss the big opportunity to co-operate with the Association of Hawaiian Pineapple Packers to stir up sales for its delicious products. The Association of Hawaiian Pineapple Packers is made up practically of all the packers of pineapple Hawaii.

The object of the association is solely to promote the sale of and educate people to the use of Hawaiian canned pineapple. Membership is purely voluntary. No attempt is made to fix uniform prices, and there has been no other co-operation than the fund for the advertising campaign for the general good of the industry. The companies operating canneries are all regularly incorporated under the laws of the territory.

The output of these companies comprises practically all names of canned pineapple found on the grocers' shelves to-day. The association, therefore, is not interested in promoting any brand of pineapple, but merely in an increase of interest and consumption of all Hawaiian canned pineapple.

Selling Talks With Clerks

BY A MAN WHO HAS BEEN ONE

Conducted by W. E. SWEENEY, Manager for L. Lehman & Co.'s
Department Food Store, Dover, N. J.

"That Isn't Up to Me."—You can never grow big and responsible and authoritative so long as you keep saying "That isn't up to me." It's a good deal better to make the thing up to you. Take the responsibility of it and solve it according to your own judgment.

The employer is surely the exception who doesn't want to shove a bit of responsibility off his own shoulders occasionally and saddle it on those of the other fellow. But you must have the willingness and wit, as they say in the Old Country, to accept it and then carry it out.

To keep constantly saying that this and that and the other "Isn't up to me" simply shows your weakness. It shows you are a man of ordinary timber, and ordinary timber isn't consulted on extraordinary questions. Quit refusing things.

Didn't Get Waited On.—Did you ever try to pick out the nervous ones in front of your counter? It's a dandy study. Some are just ready to "turn on their heel," some will wait a few minutes longer and some (heaven bless them) express on their faces as clear as day, "I'm in no hurry."

Talk as you like, but ordinarily speaking, it's no credit to a store when a woman says, "I couldn't get waited on." That implies that she wasn't spoken to. This "spoken word" is a wonderful binder. Let it be a little jolly if the occasion demands it, but for business sake, say something. Indifference is deadly. We have seen fellows keep to people in good humor, half of whom would have left in bad humor and that, sir, is up to you.

English Certificated Clerks—Have to pass a rigid examination on merchandise, which is a splendid thing and a wonderful aid to successful salesmanship, but their course apparently excludes tactful approach and the importance of emphasizing niceties.

Listen to This About Cash and Credit.

The more I see of it, the bigger hunch I've got that if something happened to stop selling goods on credit, half the stores would have to go out of business.

Reason for that is that nobody'd buy as much as they do now. Maybe the nobs would—it don't make any difference to them; they perspire money. Whether they pay now or pay in thirty days is all the same.

But to poor fish like me and the ninety million more that have to count the coin—we wouldn't buy anywhere near as much if we had to dig down and get the cash for all of it.

When you ain't got any too much cash, and have to pay cash for everything, you think first and buy afterward. When it's buy now and pay when you get ready, you buy first and think afterward. Take it from me, boys, they're two propositions entirely.

A whole lot of stuff that you've "simply got to have," when you don't have to pay for it right now, you'd find you could do without—if it meant spot cash right out of your clothes.

And that's no dream either.

I've just had an interview with my wife. Ever since we started to keep house she's bought her groceries like almost everybody else does—on a weekly or a monthly account. Sometimes she pays once a week, and sometimes once a month, just when I could borrow the money. Last month she found she had a little coin saved up—between you and me, she got some war orders for brass cannon—and she got a hunch she'd drop the credit business and shop around for cash. That's what she's been doing for five weeks. And this is how it's worked out for everybody. We've all got it in the neck but her. Me among 'em, and I'll tell you how later.

First our regular grocer got it in the neck because she closed out her account there. That meant something, because while we ain't such a big family, each of my two kids eats as much as four soldiers, so she had to buy quite some stuff to feed 'em. And the money was always there, too—we never had to be asked more than four times to pay up.

Of course she still buys some stuff there, but it ain't much beside what she got before. All she gets there she pays cash for.

The rest of the stuff she gets wherever she sees what she wants. If there's anything cheap at the chain stores, she gets it. A couple of times a week she goes to market and picks up what she wants there—mostly the stuff they don't make any money on.

That's where these places all get it in the neck. She ain't a regular customer anywhere. If one of the chain stores advertises Worcestershire sauce for 19 cents, it'll find her on the step waiting for 'em to open up, with an order for one bottle and nothing else. Then she flies away somewhere else for the next drop of honey.

"All right," I said, when she was telling me, "but you ain't said a word yet about the most important part—how much less does this cost you? Does it cost you any less?"

"Of course it does," she said. "I buy less stuff and pay less for it. Why shouldn't it cost me less?"

"How much less?"

"Well, I've got it all down. The first week I saved 75 cents—I was new at it then—the next week 60 cents—I had to have flour that week—the next week $1.37, the next week $1.23 and this week I think I'll save $1.50."

"Well," I said, "I ain't been home much in that time, so I can't tell whether you skimmed on anything.

But I'll bet the kids can. Here, Bill." Bill is the oldest of the two kids—he's a husky young tape-worm thirteen years old.

Bill came in.

"Had enough to eat lately, Bill?" I asked.

"Didn't have enough ham night 'fore last," he said promptly. Bill don't forget crimes like that.

"Oh, that was only because Charlie and his wife came in for supper without letting me know," said my wife. "There would have been plenty if it hadn't been that. He had all that was good him anyway."

"I could a et more," persists Bill. I don't doubt it either.

Well, now we come to why I get it in the neck. I get it in the neck because what do I get out of it? I give her the same money every week.

"Where do I come in on this?" I said. "I ain't heard anything about your being willing to wait less a week."

"Of course not," she said. "Well, I save's mine. I earn it going all to these places."

Ever hear such a reedical idea?

I have to pay for the extra leather she wears out, too.

Now d'ye see what I mean? I said, I ain't been home, but I ain't got any doubt they've got just as well on cash as they do on credit. Maybe better, because they can pick up stuff that way. I look what's been saved (to her) Why that'll run up into $50 or

It has been said that a good salesman helps folks to think of the things they need. This week's window is a gem of a salesman, for nothing is omitted that is needed to houseclean. The background is made up of a floor of attractive patterned linoleum. Draw rope from two clothesline reels on the floor of the window to either side and then one line straight across the top which hang the sign—white oilcloth lettered in black ink. Make pyramids of buckets at either side. About in the center of the window stand a circle of brooms, fastening at the top a duster, two dust brushes and two wire brooms. At either side place some carpet beaters and a semi-circle of scrub brushes. At the extreme front of the window in the center, make a semi-circle of circles, first of white soap, next yellow soap, then alternately a bottle of ammonia and a can of lye. Fill vacant spaces as shown in cut with rolls of stove and metal polishes and packages of washing powder.

335.—Some New and Important Law on Buying and Selling Goods.

Some law as to buying and selling merchandise that is practically new to this country has just been made by the United States Court for the Northern District of Illinois. The decision has a much wider influence than the decision of a State Court would have. There are United States Courts all over the United States, and they all have the same jurisdiction. As the State Courts are always influenced more or less by the United States Courts, there is a strong chance that the law laid down in this case will henceforth be the law of the land.

The question involved was this: When A sells B, a dealer, certain merchandise with a specific guarantee that it is of certain quality, and B, relying on the guarantee, sells it to a customer, C, with the same guarantee, and C uses it and finds it is not what it was represented to be, of course C can at once come back on B and collect damages. But heretofore the law has always been supposed to be that before B could go back on A for his damages, he, B, must have paid C the damages which C claimed of B, and if B never paid C, B could never collect anything of A. The United States Court in the case I refer to has changed all this. It decides that B can go after A right away, before he has paid C, and even though he may never pay C. This upon the theory that B's liability to pay C is sufficient ground for his suit against A.

This is exceedingly radical law, in my judgment, and will introduce a new element into thousands of mercantile transactions.

The facts in the Illinois case are interesting. The merchandise involved was cucumber seed, but readers will understand that the law is the same no matter what it was. A wholesale dealer in seed sold to a retailer a quantity of seed which he represented to be "Improved Chicago Pickling." The retailer in turn sold it to a grower under the same warranty—that it was "improved Chicago pickling." The grower planted it, but found when his crop came up that the seed was not what it was represented to be. He accordingly notified the retailer of what had happened, but made no effort to enforce his claim for damages and might never have enforced it, according to the evidence.

The status then was that the retailer was facing liability for the damage sustained by the grower, although he had not yet been damaged, and would not be, unless the grower got after him and made him pay. Of course the cause of the damage was the false guarantee which was given by the original seller, and which was carried on by the retailer to his customer the grower.

The courts have always agreed that the minute the retailer settled his customer's claim of damage, he the retailer, could make similar claim upon the original seller. Up to this time, however, they have not generally ruled that the retailer could go back on the original seller before he had actually sustained the damage that he claimed. The Illinois Court, however, ruled that he could, and gave him damages. Naturally the grower can now immediately demand his damages from the retailer, and the latter, unless he goes bankrupt, will have to pay them. If, however, as is possible, though I admit not probable, the grower should never hear that the retailer had gotten damages, and should moreover, be temperamentally easy and should not press his own claim against the retailer, the latter will have recovered damages that he never sustained.

Here is another possibility: Let us say that the retailer in the above case recovers his damages in full from the original seller. He then succeeds in settling his own liability to the grower for 50 per cent. of its face—again he will be in the position of having collected damages that he had not sustained.

This decision, in its application to all lines of mercantile business, has almost unlimited possibilities.

If a grocer sells canned molasses packed by a manufacturer, to a customer, and the tin explodes and injures the customer, the grocer sue the manufacturer—if there is a guarantee that the tin would explode—before he has been sued himself and when he might not be sued.

A retail dry goods dealer may buy a guaranteed unfadable fabric from a manufacturer. He in turn guarantees it unfadable to his customer. It fades. The retailer collect his possible damages from the manufacturer before they are sustained, and afterward there is nothing to prevent him from making a much better deal with his customer, thus actually netting a profit on the transaction.

One plan might block this, is for the manufacturer to get the name of the customer whom the dealer was relying upon to collect damage, and write him something like this, after the manufactur-

Possible Cases Under New Pennsylvania Workmen's Compensation Act

Becomes Operative Next January 1st, and Makes all Retail Merchants Within the State Liable for Accidents to Their Employees While Latter are at Work.

Possible Case No. 6.

The Parker Tea and Coffee Co. operate a series of tea and coffee stores throughout the State, and hire a large number of clerks and route men. In order to get around the new Workmen's Compensation Act, which goes into effect on January 1st next, they compel all new and old employees to sign an agreement releasing the employer from liability for accident on payment of $1 per week extra wages. The firm work the plan thus: They say they will give a clerk $14 per week, but if he will sign the agreement they will give him $1 extra, making $15. This because their attorney advised them that such an agreement would have to have consideration, i. e., the clerk must be paid something for making it, or it would be void. One of the clerks signs the agreement and afterward gets his fingers mangled in a coffee mill. The question is, is the agreement which he signed releasing the employer from liability good? Not. The law explicitly provides that all such agreements shall be null and void. The clerk, however, cannot claim compensation under the law, for his employer has agreed directly or indirectly to pay it to him. What he can do is to sue for damages, and he will surely get a verdict whether it was his fault or not, for the act provides that if an employer is sued, he cannot use any of the principal defenses which employers have been accustomed to use in such cases.

est Cash Register Sale on Record.
e National Cash Register Co., at on, Ohio, recently celebrated the est sale of cash registers in its ory. This order came from Manter, England, where the Bury Coative Society purchased 88 registers he latest design. The largest pres single order came from Marshall & Co., Chicago. The American rtment store bought 85 machines.
Bury Society, established in 1856, ne of the many co-operative organ-ons in England. It has a member-of over 13,500. The majority of machines purchased will be used in grocery, butcher, drapery and shoe s managed by the Society.

Sell Franklin Carton Sugar by the Container

Your customers know what sugar is and what it will do, and expect to keep on buying it and eating it as long as they live. The right thing to do when a woman asks for sugar is to sell her a SUPPLY instead of SAMPLE—sell her a WHOLE CONTAINER of FRANKLIN CARTON SUGAR instead of one or two CARTONS.

It's easy to show a woman the convenience of having a CONTAINER of FRANKLIN CARTON SUGAR in the house, always handy when she needs it.

Selling FRANKLIN CARTON SUGAR by the CONTAINER is not only a convenience for your customers, but it saves you money, because you make one delivery instead of dozens. It gives you a wholesale outlet at a retail profit—you don't have to even open the CONTAINER to make your profit on every CARTON in it. When you sell a woman a CONTAINER of 30 two-pound CARTONS you make the profit on her purchases of sugar for some time to come; if you sell her one CARTON you leave an opening for competitors to sell her the other TWENTY-NINE. Lots of your customers buy flour by the barrel, potatoes by the bushel, canned goods by the dozen—it just as easy to sell them FRANKLIN CARTON SUGAR BY THE CONTAINER. Try it.

FRANKLIN CARTON SUGAR is packed 24, 48, 60 and 120 pounds to the CONTAINER. Ask your Jobber for full information as to grades.

WHAT TO TELL CUSTOMERS

"Here's the right way to buy sugar, Madam—30 Franklin Cartons in a neat Container. It's a big convenience to have a supply of sugar in the house and know you won't have to run out every time you want a pound or two."

This is one of the firms the sale of whose products helps organize the Pennsylvania Retail Merchants

I have from McKelvey & Co., of Youngstown, Ohio, copy of a newspaper in which they ran a double page advertisement of a 32d birthday sale. It is a good advertisement and undoubtedly attracted a lot of attention. Perhaps the type used for the text was too small—I think it was. It was about the size of the smallest type used for the reading matter of this paper. When you have a couple of pages set mostly in that type, the effect is crowded, no matter how many cuts or heads you have. That is one thing I have always admired about the Wanamaker advertisements—they are never set in small type. Just for purposes of comparison I am reproducing a few inches of the McKelvey advertisement side by side with a like amount of a Wanamaker advertisement. I leave it to anybody if the Wanamaker advertisement doesn't look more interesting and inviting. It's entirely the size of type:—

The McKelvey Advertisement.

The Art Needlework in the Anniversary Sale

Stamped Night Gowns—a nice quality of nainsook, stamped in simple effective designs; regular value 59c; Anniversary price 39c.

Pillow Cases—42 inch size; scalloped designs of the very newest patterns—made of an excellent quality of tubing; value 50c and 65c; Anniversary price, pair 35c.

Towels—a pure linen huck towel with scalloped and scroll patterns of the very newest design; guest sizes; values up to 35c; Anniversary price 19c.

Stamped Linens—an immense collection of center pieces ranging in sizes up to 45 inch; all the best quality linen; all sizes, Anniversary price 1-3 off.

The Wanamaker Advertisement.

Two Smart New Extra High Shoes for Women

With the new tailored skirts many women like boots much higher than the ordinary. We have just received two fine new laced models.

One is black Russia calfskin with matt kidskin top, perforated vamp and tip, and high Cuban heel.

The other is bronze kidskin with brown cloth top and Louis heel.

Price, $8 a pair.

(Main Floor, Market)

If I were doing department store advertising of the McKelvey type, I should never, if I had my own way, use smaller type than that used in the Wanamaker advertisement. Of course you can't get as much matter in, but you can get enough in, particularly if the lesser amount is more likely to be read through than the larger amount. Put a page in the small type beside a page in the large, and the difference between the two will be most remarkable.

This two-page advertisement covered a wide range of articles—there is a section devoted to groceries. The same criticism applies to that—the text is, in my judgment, set in too small type. I am reproducing it slightly reduced in size.

This is good advertising, I think. Of course it is price advertising more than anything else, and the price speaks louder than almost anything else in the advertisement. I have never quite seen the logic that inspires everybody to celebrate their anniversary by cutting prices. It always seemed to me that it would be better to sell at regular prices and give a particularly handsome souvenir of some sort to buyers. If the souvenir is handsome enough it will attract trade just as a cut price would, and it would be trade at full prices. The chance is that the cost would be no more, while the advertising value would I believe be greater. And you Pennsylvania News Items.

The second National Apple Day parade, held in Pittsburgh, Pa., during the week, was much larger than that of last year, although this year's apple crop was not as large as that of last year. The parade started shortly before noon at Smallman and Twenty-second streets and moved down Penn avenue to the downtown district. Thousands of apples were distributed along the route of the parade by the occupants of automobiles and decorated trucks, and when the Northside was reached the supply of the fruit was almost exhausted. Many floats decorated with apples were in the parade.

In an opinion by Judge Head of the Superior Court, rendered during the week, there was sustained the constitutionality of the act of May 8, 1909, for the prevention of the manufacture and sale of adulterated or misbranded drugs. The action reversed the Quarter Sessions Court of Fayette County, which held in the case of the Commonwealth vs. J. H. Sweeney that the first provision of the third tion of the act was unconstitutional and quashed the indictment. The case was on ginder.

Some Canteloupes.

A total of 16,401 carloads of canteloupes were shipped last year, according to a report made public by the Department of Agriculture. These figures do not include the local products shipped to market by the farmers themselves. California was by far the greatest producer of canteloupes, shipping a total of 5,146 carloads. Colorado, the second State, produced a little more than as many, a total of 2,809 carloads. Iowa and Indiana came next, 1,260 and 1,243 carloads respectively. Georgia was the only other State shipping more than 1,000 carloads. The Department reported that canteloupes are transported long distances to market and the products of many different States compete in the big cities. In August, 1914, melons from Texas were being sold in New York City in competition with those from New Jersey. On one day in August, in Chicago, melons from eight different States were on the market, some coming from Michigan, Texas, California and Delaware.

Again in Season!

*Fresh Sausage, Scrapple,
Soupe, Liver Pudding*

Burk's Fresh Sausage

Composed entirely of selected tender pieces of pork, not the ordinary trimmings commonly used. Not cheapened in price and quality by the addition of tripe, boiled rice and sundry substitutes. Correctly seasoned, not offensive to sensitive stomachs because of pungent herbs. Nutritious. In four styles—hashed fine and coarse, linked and in straight casings.

Burk's Philadelphia Scrapple

Prepared from the very best materials—good, wholesome meats and extra fine corn meal. Well boiled and seasoned to suit the most critical. Not to be compared with some cheap products of doubtful hues and colors. Burk's eats as good as it looks. Superior to farmers' products. In pans of 15 pounds each.

Burk's Pig Soupe

is a seasonable specialty prepared fresh daily, in pans of five pounds each. The jelly is clear and transparent and free from vegetable gelatines and ill-smelling glue stock. Contains plenty of meat and garnished with slices of lemon and parsley.

Proves attractive when turned out of the pan, and is a quick seller, saving the consumer the trouble of cooking pig's feet, so difficult to obtain at this season of the year.

Burk's Liver Pudding

Of the usual "Burk" standard—clean and unadulterated. Rich in quality and an excellent dish when fried, or, after removing the casing, hashed with potatoes. In rings of 1 pound each.

The Subscribers' Bargain List

Have you got any goods you don't want? Anything—canned goods, groceries, hardware, dry goods, anything at all that's in good condition, but won't sell for you.

If you will make a price on it we can probably sell it for you in a hurry. Write us about it, stating the quantity, condition and your best price. You might give the original cost, too. We will give it a key number and offer it to our 4,000 subscribers. Your name will not appear unless you want it to. All sales ought to be on a cash basis.

The point is that what won't sell for you may be in everyday demand for somebody else, who will be glad to get your stock of it at a bargain.

There will be no charge for this service anywhere—we do it to help along.

Where the Glass Jar Comes In

¶ The glass jar in which Croft's Swiss Milk Cocoa—and that only—is packed offers the entering wedge to a sale, because it is un- usual.

¶ No woman ever saw cocoa packed in glass be- fore; the sight is novel; she asks about it, and if you help a little, she buys.

¶ Bought once, Croft's Swiss Milk Cocoa will always be bought again, for it has a flavor which has never been successfully imitated. Our exclusive making process removes the bad, develops the good, and the result is the smoothest, most delicious drinking cocoa on the market

Listen to What One Hundred Women Said About Your Stores

They Answer a List of Nineteen Questions as to Free Delivery, Buying for Cash, Mail Order Buying, Soliciting Orders and so on. Most of the Hundred Did Not Alter Their Opinion of an Article's Quality When the Price was Cut.

Not long ago "System," the business magazine, sent a list of nineteen questions on matters connected with the purchase of every day supplies to a selected list of representative women—presidents of women's clubs. There were about 100 in all and something like 94 answered. "System" has kindly furnished this paper with copies of the questions and the answers and from these we publish the following summary. What nearly 100 women think about vital storekeeping matters is pretty sure to be what all women think:—

What method of sales solicitation appeals to you most as a customer—sales letters, personal calls, newspaper advertisements, samples, and so on? Why?

Nearly 13 per cent. of the women stated explicitly that they object to personal and telephone calls as part of an effort to sell them goods. However, 7.2 per cent. favored telephone and personal calls as methods of sales solicitation. It is worth noticing that the majority of those who expressed a preference for personal sales calls live in towns or villages.

By far the largest group of answers to this question expressed a preference for magazine and newspaper advertisements—57 per cent. The remainder of the answers favored samples (13.4 per cent.); demonstrations (1.8 per cent.); sales letters (6.9 per cent.); and show windows (1.2 per cent.).

What, if any, of the service which most merchants nowadays render—free delivery, rest rooms, credit accounts, and so on—do you think could be just as well discontinued?

Over 59 per cent. of these women feel that one or another of the services could be just as well abandoned. The remainder emphatically asserted that all the services now supplied are required, and one or two even suggested that additional services are needed.

The majority of those who thought that less service would be sufficient suggested that credit privileges be abandoned. Others suggested a restriction of the privilege of returning purchases, less generous free delivery schedules and more expenditures for rest rooms.

What percentage of his sales do you imagine, on a guess, a grocer in a city of about 100,000 pays out to deliver to you the goods you buy of him?

Would you be willing to order from your grocer between certain hours so that he could reduce his deliveries to a definite schedule?

Would you be willing to pay cash for your groceries if prices were thereby reduced 2 per cent.?

Would you be willing to pay cash for your groceries and carry home all but heavy purchases if prices were reduced 10 per cent.?

The replies to these questions indicate that the average housewife in this group is glad to co-operate with merchants in carrying out plans for schedules—and, therefore, less expensive—deliveries. A very pronounced willingness to pay cash, and to carry home light purchases was also shown—provided, of course, that suitable reductions in prices were made.

Ninety-six per cent. of these women said that they are willing to order goods according to a definite delivery schedule. About one per cent. remarked that they are already doing this.

The answers were not so overwhelmingly in favor of price reductions in return for cash purchases and the non-delivery of all but heavy goods. Still, over 76 per cent. were in favor of paying cash and receiving a reduction of 2 per cent., while over 74 per cent. expressed a willingness to carry home all but heavy purchases, and to pay cash besides, if prices were reduced 10 per cent.

Did you ever buy by mail?

Do you feel that goods purchased in large quantities, as they usually must be from mail-order houses (because of the sugar prices depending on quantity purchase) would be consumed with needless extravagance?

It is extremely suggestive to find that no less than nearly 48 per cent. of the answers reported purchases, at one time or another, from mail-order houses, although about 2 per cent. mentioned that these dealings were very limited in extent. The answers gave support to the contention that bulk purchases result in rapid consumption—nearly 60 per cent. expressed this opinion. A number added that it holds particularly true when servants handle the purchases. About 5 per cent. stated that the character of the consumer is the deciding factor; the remainder held that bulk purchases do not speed up consumption to any marked extent.

Does it lower your estimation of a nationally known article to see it offered for sale at a cut price—say, an Ingersoll watch offered for 49 cents?

Over 61 per cent. of the replies stated that price-cutting has no effect on the estimation in which the brand is held, 34 per cent. took the opposite viewpoint, and 4½ per cent. were undecided. Some of answers to this important question will be of interest—for example

Do you find that merchants give more care and attention to customers who have charge accounts and less to those who pay cash?

Over 62 per cent. of the answers stated that charge customers receive the most attention; about 31 per cent. took exactly the opposite stand; and approximately 7 per cent. did not reply definitely.

Dry Goods Distribution Increases

Marshall Field & Co. in their review of the dry goods trade say

Current wholesale distribution of dry goods shows a healthy increase over the corresponding period of a year ago, in spite of the weather, which has tended to strict demands upon the retailer.

Road sales for both immediate and spring delivery are running ahead of the past two years, and merchants continue to come to market in much larger numbers. Collections are well ahead of a year ago.

The Trade Believes This Scheme Is Bad Business

Plan is the Commercial Credit Co.'s to Popularize the Practice of Selling Jobbers' Accounts Against Retailers. National Credit Men's Association is Fighting it Because It Leads to Secret Shrinking of Apparent Assets.

The trade generally seem to be getting considerably aroused over the effort of the Commercial Credit Co. of Baltimore, Md., to popularize the practice on the part of wholesalers of selling their accounts against retailers in order to raise money. The practice is being fought by the National Credit Men's Association who will attempt to have laws passed forbidding it. They say it induces fraud. A wholesale grocer will apparently be doing an active business. One of the assets of such business is always the book accounts, and belief that there is such an asset has very probably affected the granting of credit to such jobber. As a matter of fact, the National Credit Men's Association argue, he may have sold his accounts to some such concern as the Commercial Credit Co. and spent the money. His assets in such a case would of course be much less than they seemed.

This is the scheme of the Commercial Credit Co. quoted from one of their letters:—

With spot cash you can buy "gains," increase your volume, reduce your overhead, save accounts and improve your credit prompt payment of your bills.

You can sell us all or part of your invoices or customers' notes without notice to and without knowledge of your customers, a total discount of only—

Our total charges on the net of accounts, including interest, change, postage and all other extra from date of our purchase paid, are only:—

½ per cent. if payments average 15 days.

1 per cent. if payments average 30 days.

1½ per cent. if payments average 45 days.

2 per cent. if payments average 60 days.

1-30 of 1 per cent. per day from date of our purchase until paid, plus a fee of $5 per $1,000 on the first $100,000 sold within a year.

No commission. No interest. exchange. No extras.

How do these rates compare with the discounts you offer to your customers for cash in 10 to 30 days? Don't they pay our charge by taking the discount you offer them? If they discount our charge it is very small.

We will pay you about 80 per cent. spot cash on your invoice or customers' notes as your shipments are made—balance, as each invoice or note is paid by your customer. You collect our accounts for us.

Important Notice to the Wholesale and Retail Grocery Trade

¶ We announce Goldenoyle, the highest grade cooking and salad oil ever put on the market.

¶ We know what we are talking about, for we have refined and sold salad oils for over twenty-five years.

¶ So does Prof. L. B. Allyn, the famous food chemist of the Westfield, Mass., Board of Health, know what he is talking about. He analyzed Goldenoyle and not only gave it the very highest commendation, but orders it for his own household.

¶ Anything bearing the Westfield standard is half sold now-a-days. Every consumer knows about the Westfield Health Board, Dr. Allyn, and their influence on food purity.

¶ Goldenoyle is beautifully packed, and is a high-class article for fine trade. It pays everybody a satisfactory profit and ought to be a winner from the start.

¶ Have you noticed how tremendously the demand for vegetable oils as substitutes for lard and butter, has increased?

Packed 4 doz., 7-oz. bottles; 2 doz. small cans, 21 $\frac{3}{4}$ oz. each; and 1 doz. $\frac{1}{2}$ -gal. cans. On 3-case order we prepay the freight. Beautiful receipt book for retailers' customers.

Why a Manufacturer Should Be Permitted to Fix the Retail Price of His Product.

Views of Various Believers in This Doctrine Who Offer Them as Arguments for the Pending Stevens Bill.

[The "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" has obtained and will from time to time present a series of statements by various well-known persons who believe that the manufacturer should have the right to tell the retailer what price he must get for the manufacturer's product. All of the views which will be presented can be taken as arguments for the pending Stevens Bill, which seeks to give a manufacturer that right.—Ed.]

No. 6.—By Samuel C. Henry, President National Association of Retail Druggists, 501 South Sixty-first Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

Opponents of the Stevens bill have expressed two opinions: First, that retailers would not patronize manufacturers who maintained prices on their products, as this bill proposes; and second, that the public would not patronize the retailers who did patronize such manufacturers and maintain contractual relation.

In answer to this I will say that the principle of this bill is a matter of life and death to the small dealer, and is essential to the welfare and continued existence of the small town; it is the most vital question of the day to the small man in business. The Stevens bill is his bill; it is his baby. It is ridiculous to suggest that he does not favor it in the face of the fact that every large association of retailers in the country has indorsed it. Conditions such as it will restore are the only conditions that stand between independent retailers and annihilation by the great distributive monopoly that is now visibly building. To assume that retailers will not support such a law as this bill proposes is to assume that they will go on, open eyed, straight over a profitless road to inevitable failure.

The suggestion that the public will not pay a fair uniform price for standard goods indicates an attitude contrary to the public policy that has created and will maintain the Interstate Commerce Commission and the Federal Trade Commission, a policy of equality under the law; equality of opportunity and reward for initiative. Evidence has been submitted that clearly shows that predatory price cutting is a fraud upon the consumer. That this is appreciated by the intelligent public is proven by the words of the public press and the statements made in hundreds of gatherings of organizations created for the heightening of national honor, especially national commercial honor.

There is only one merchandising element in this country that comes into direct, personal contact with the individual consumers, and that is the retailing element, especially the element consisting of proprietors of small stores who are salesmen in their own establishments. We know, better than any others, that intelligent consumers are rapidly awakening to the general fraud of sham bargains, that they do want to be able to get standard goods freely in an open market at a uniform price, and not be obliged to shop, to fight, to haggle, and in the end find that they are the victims of higher general costs of living than ever before. As for the ignorant and careless purchasers, who in reality constitute a large portion of the consuming public, legitimate retailers know by actual observation and experience that irregular prices on well-known articles deprive them of any means of estimating or measuring values. We believe that the bill is distinctly favorable to this class, that it will assure them dollar value for dollar spent.

For more than 25 years independent retailers of the United States in all lines of trade have been studying the question; it is the question of their existence; studying it from the consumer's point of view as well as their own; studying it from that point as none but the consumers and themselves can study it, and upon that study, that experience, such as no other class could have, they voice their approval of this bill; voice it through all their great national associations and hundreds of their State and local organizations, and with this voice they express the firm conviction that unless legislation such as is proposed in the Stevens bill is speedily enacted the people of the United States will find themselves in the clutches of a great distributive monopoly made through a combination of mail-order houses, store chains and allied interests, and that monopoly will say to the American consumer: "You shall buy what I choose to sell you and pay whatever it may be my pleasure to ask you."

Beans Containing Culls Are Adulterated But Government Will Not Seize Them If They Have Been Picked.

Department of Agriculture Answers Inquiries as to Shipping Dried Beans Which Contain Some Bad Ones. If They Have Been Hand-picked Government Will Not Condemn for the Few Bad Beans That Remains.

Special Correspondence of "Modern Merchant and Grocery World."

Washington, D. C.,

November 4, 1915.

The Department of Agriculture has been requested by many growers and shippers to define its position with respect to the application of the Federal Food and Drugs Act to the transportation in interstate commerce of dry pea or navy, medium and kidney beans. These requests have been prompted by the action of the Department in recommending seizures of "cull" beans in sacks and of beans in cans which were found upon examination to contain considerable percentages of beans which were wholly or in part filthy, decomposed or putrid.

Under the Federal Food and Drugs Act, beans are adulterated if they consist "in whole or in part of a filthy, decomposed or putrid animal or vegetable substance." "Cull" beans, in the opinion of the Department, usually contain considerable percentages of beans which wholly or in part filthy or decomposed and are therefore adulterated. The shipment in interstate commerce of such beans for food purposes is prohibited by the act.

The Department is informed that dry pea or navy, medium and kidney beans intended for use as food for man are sent customarily by growers to elevators where beans are sorted by hand picking as to eliminate the beans which wholly or in part filthy, decomposed or putrid. It has been represented that in the process of hand picking nearly all moldy or musty beans are removed, but that it is not practicable to remove all beans which are slightly decomposed. The Department has not recommended seizure of dry and mature pea or navy, medium or kidney beans which have been hand picked in accordance with good commercial practice.

Ross Food Company File Answer to Shredded Wheat Biscuit Suit

The Ross Food Co., which was recently sued in New London, Conn., by the Shredded Wheat Co. for marketing shredded wheat biscuit which it alleged was an imitation of Shredded Wheat Biscuit, has filed a voluminous answer. Stripped of legal verbiage, the answer claims that the Shredded Wheat Co.'s patents have expired, and the Ross Food Co. therefore has the right to use the name that shredded wheat biscuits are separated from the cartons and do not reach the consumer without distinguishing marks, but are packed by the Shredded Wheat Co. either in cartons or envelopes, clearly distinguishing them from Ross biscuits; that the Ross Food Co. biscuits are admittedly like shredded wheat biscuits in appearance, but are prepared differently from shredded wheat biscuits and cannot be confused with them; that the advertising language which the Shredded Wheat Co. said the Ross Food Co. copied from the former's advertisement was simply a correct description of a biscuit, and anybody can use the

It's a splendid frame—they have seven kinds of frames—with little places where steel letters fit. You can set up any sign in no time and say anything in it that the police will let you say. Gives you a reg-

Independent Retailers Declare for Stevens Bill. New York University Now Conducts Course in Retail Store Management. Rejection of New Constitution a Blow to Retailers.

Special Correspondence of "Modern Merchant and Grocery World."

New York, November 5, 1915.

The conference of independent retail merchants which, as reported in the last letter, was scheduled to be held at the Hotel Astor on Thursday night, adopted the following resolutions in favor of the Stevens bill. The conference was presided over by the American Fair Trade League and I am told that the resolutions were drawn by E. A. Pittier, secretary of that organization:—

Whereas, Certain interests, opposed to the Stevens Bill, are employing ingenious and plausible arguments which are misleading and designed to render the Stevens Bill unpopular with the retail trade; and

Whereas, These arguments are intentionally misleading, inasmuch as the Stevens Bill expressly provides for a fair and equitable disposal of unsalable merchandise, in that the dealer may sell goods at any price he chooses, provided he has first given the manufacturer an opportunity to take them off his hands, at what they cost; and

Whereas, Practically every organization of retail trade has gone on record as favoring the bill; therefore be it

Resolved, That the Conference of Independent Retailers of the Metropolitan District indorses the Stevens Bill, protests against the unfair methods to defeat it, and favors the reintroduction of the bill at the next Congress and pledges its influence and assistance in promoting its passage; further

Resolved, That we reaffirm our belief in the principles of price standardization, and indorse the Stevens Bill as being the only practical form of legislation, now visible, which promises the establishment of resale prices, preventing predatory price cutting, and offering guaranty of free and honest competition in all lines of trade; and

Resolved, That the secretary be instructed to send a copy of these resolutions to the President of the United States, to each member of the Federal Trade Commission, to every member of the United States Senate and House of Representatives, to the Governor and to every member of the State Legislature and to the press.

Considerable interest is taken in the fact that the New York University is now providing a special course in retail store management. It is said that the various courses are handled by men who have practical experience and that they are really very helpful. The course of lectures includes the following subjects:—

The retailer's place in the distribution of goods.

Equipment and efficient store arrangement.

The organization of typical retail establishments.

Selecting and training the store's employees.

The store's policy as to service, quality, premiums, etc.

Buying, stock records and pricing.

Advertising, window displays and arrangement of merchandise.

Selling and methods of directing the sales force.

Delivery and credit problems.

Standards of efficiency for the retail store.

The wholesaler's co-operation with the retailer.

The rejection of the New York State Constitution was a decided blow to the retail trade of this city, for it would have abolished the recent Department of Markets which was recently created for the purpose of opening public markets at which producers could sell their goods direct to consumers. Not only this, but the new constitution would have made it impossible for the Legislature to have created such a department.

The Interstate Commerce Commission has dismissed the complaint of the New York Mercantile Exchange against various transportation companies. The Exchange contended, as did a number of its members who joined in the cause as individuals, that receivers of eggs should not be expected to accept damaged eggs in apparent good order when there was evidence on the outside of the cases that the eggs were actually in bad order. The receivers claim that the railroad companies would compel them to sign for obviously damaged eggs as "in apparent good order" and would hold this receipt up against them when they found that the eggs were not in good order and would bring suit for the damages. Receivers also complained of some of the rules and as to the making of claims, contending that they were unreasonable and arbitrary. The commission ruled that it had no power to alter any of these things

Speaking of the many men who can very successfully show other people how to run their business, but fail completely when they attempt to run a business for themselves, take the case of Seymour Eaton. I see the Philadelphia "Record" is advertising "One Hundred Lessons in Business," by Seymour Eaton, as a subscription premium. This reminds me that one of the most complete and colossal business failures which I ever knew was the failure of Seymour Eaton's Tabard Inn scheme. Almost everybody remembers that. It started with a sort of circulating library, which was subsequently enlarged to include the sale of high grade and very expensive specialties like coffee and olive oil. Eaton had even wilder ambitions than these—in many ways he expected to revolutionize business.

Do As I Say, Not As I Do.

The whole scheme completely collapsed. It melted away more completely, considering its size and importance, than any scheme in my time. The bankruptcy court got it and though some people bought the brands and carried them along for a while, they also disappeared after a little.

Yet here is Eaton, writing "one hundred lessons in business" for other people to follow. I wonder whether his hundred rules are those he followed.

Frequently in the last few years I have discussed the value of arbitration as a means

Arbitration Instead of Law Suits.

of settling business disputes. The opinion I have expressed is that if business men would cultivate the habit of submitting their controversies to three arbitrators in whom they had confidence, they would be saved a vast amount of expensive and annoying litigation, and in most cases justice would be done just as well.

In the November bulletin of the National Wholesale Grocers' Association is the report of eleven arbitrations held recently by the members of that organization. Reading them, to a lawyer, is exceedingly interesting. Each one is material for a perfect law suit, yet the whole eleven were settled without even one law suit. And outside of the arbitrators' fees, there was no expense.

Here is the report of Arbitration No. 12, showing how effectively the plan compromises the difficulty:

Sept. 23, 1915. A Missouri jobber purchased from a California packer 300 cases No. 2½ Extra Standard Y. C. Peaches. They were rejected on arrival on the ground that the fruit was irregular and the syrup not up to the usual test for Extra Standards. The rejection was sustained and the arbitrators recommended that the buyers take the peaches with an allowance of 5 cents per dozen.

Any one who has seen a judge trying to decide whether a rejection of certain goods was justified, the goods being some, perhaps, that he never even heard of, will prefer the settlement of such technical questions by men who know the subject. The court really never decides such questions anyway—it takes the word of experts, who are partisan because they are hired by one party or the other. Personally, if I were a party, no matter which party I was, I should prefer having it decided by non-partisan experts.

A writer in "Printers' Ink" says some interesting things about the interior arrangement of retail grocery stores:—

The grocery business is a very old business; it is strange that the physical characteristics of grocery stores have not changed to any noticeable extent.

Nineteen grocery stores in 20 are just about what 19 stores in 20 were 40 years ago—as far as the arrangement of the floor space is concerned.

Take a case in point, a good-sized grocery in a town of 20,000. On either side of the door through which buyers enter, are windows. They may be plate-glass windows, but the chances are they are not. Down both sides of the store run long counters. On all counters, close to the entrance door, rest showcases in which are displayed a few boxes of candies, a few boxes of stogies, some tobacco, and a varied assortment of 5-cent toilet soaps. Back of the counters are shelves which groan under the weight of canned goods, baking powders, matches, laundry soap, cereals, etc.

Ten or 12 feet from the door is a stand in which the products of the National Biscuit Co.—or the Loose-Wiles Co.—are on exhibition.

Somewhere, either in the front or back of the store, is pretty sure to be a barrel or two of apples and a few bags of potatoes.

If you will stop to think of it, you will realize that this arrangement is far from ideal. Space is not utilized as it should be. The store seldom looks neat. Sales people take a great many unnecessary steps.

Perhaps all of this is true. Still, the merchant who can get people into his store and sell them merchandise at a profit can make his sales and his profits pretty nearly as well with this old inside arrangement as with some more modern plan. Perhaps it isn't quite as convenient to customers, or to himself, for that matter, or as sightly as some other arrangement would be, but it isn't a determining factor as between success and failure.

I am not disparaging modern methods of arranging a store interior. In fact, it has always been my idea that there is room for a new profession—that of interior store architect, who would go in a store and show the proprietor how to rearrange it so as to be more attractive, more convenient, more compact, and more saving in shoe room. This could be done in nine stores out of ten. There are men who do this, but they confine their work to large stores.

In the last issue a brief Washington letter stated that several large Western coffee houses have complained to the Federal Trade Commission that some of the statements made in the advertising coffee substitutes were untrue and libelous as to coffee. They claim that this was unfair competition and asked that it be stopped.

Untrue statements in any advertising ought to be stopped, of course, whether they are about coffee substitutes or about coffee. I respectfully suggest, however, that while the coffee men are seeking to cure the tendency to exaggerate the evils of coffee, on the part of the substitute people, they go after those of their own number who are using the same argument before the public, and in a fraudulent way.

For instance, in a Government food law report just received, is the history of a case brought against a well known St. Louis coffee hotel which sold a soluble coffee under the following representation: "Our process of manufacturing soluble coffee, nearly all the caffeine and tannic acid is discarded, consequently taking out the sting and making it more wholesome and harmless for people who are distressed when drinking regular made coffee." There is no real difference between this and the argument of the substitute men.

The Government analyzed the coffee and found that "little or none of the caffeine or tannic acid had been discarded in the process of manufacture of said article, and said article was not rendered by any process of manufacture more wholesome and harmless for people who are distressed when drinking regular made coffee." In other

Mr. Smedley organized the merchants of Wellsboro on October 25th, with 41 members. This is only a start. The association will eventually include every business man in the town.

The meeting was held at the Country Club and took the form of a dinner.
The representative business people of the town were present. E. E. Bennett presided, and the Organizer made the chief address of the evening.

This is an association of great promise and a great work is before it. A paid secretary will be employed and headquarters established.

The Pennsylvania Plan is again in operation and the rules governing the same are as follows:—

LIST OF AWARDS AND RULES GOVERN- ING SAME.

Fifteen hundred dollars on purchases of merchandise listed in the Pennsylvania Plan from September
1, 1915, to July 31, 1916.

Awards will be made only on reports of purchases made by retail members of local associations, certified to by the local secretary or other authorized official, on forms provided for that purpose, and must be in the hands of the Committee on Pennsylvania Plan by noon on the second day of the annual convention, to be held at Bradford, Pa.

Associations to be eligible to competition in any of the various awards shall have paid their per capita tax to the Retail Merchants' Association of Pennsylvania up to July 31, 1916. Awards will be made by dividing the total purchases of Pennsylvania Plan products by the total number of grocer members of that association, and on the unit base thus formed.

First award$300
Second award 200
Third award 100
Fourth award 100
Fifth award 100
Sixth to nineteenth awards, $50 each.

Eight hundred dollars for mileage.
To be divided among association

Women Will Thank You

Chase-O is quite unlike any other washing help made, and can't be compared with any other.
With boiling water and a little soap, it will actually do whole washes—gets rid of all the hard work. Women will thank you for introducing them to it—your own wife would. Sells for a nickel, and sells again and again. Look into it.

Louisiana Anti-trading Stamp Law Upheld. Only One So Far.

The Supreme Court of Louisiana has just handed down a decision to the effect that the trading stamp law of that State, imposing a tax of $5,000 on trading stamp companies, is constitutional. The opinion was rendered in the case of Charles A. Underwood, doing business as the Southern Mercantile Exchange, which came up on an appeal from the District Court, where Underwood had secured a favorable verdict. Underwood dealt in Hamilton coupons and was generally accepted as being the representative of the Sperry & Hutchinson interests in Louisiana, his concern being merely a subterfuge to evade the law, it having been proven that he did a regular trading stamp business. Underwood is enjoined from doing business in the State until he pays the $5,000 fee, with interest at the rate of 2 per cent. per month from June 10, 1913, the date of the filing of the original suit. The decree stands as a judgment against the defendant and constitutes a first lien on any and all of the assets of the concern. The case will be appealed to the United States Supreme Court.

Goods That Are Being Advertised to Your Customers

"Modern Merchant and Grocery World" Makes Compilation of Products for Which Demand is Being Created Through Leading Periodicals. Papers and Magazines Used as Basis Cover Entire Country.

[The compilation which appears below is the result of more thinking along a line which was given some discussion several months ago, viz., the advantage to the retailer of keeping posted as to what products are being advertised to his customers, so that he may get the benefit of such advertising, if the product is for other reasons a desirable one to sell. The list here presented includes practically every leading magazine and periodical, and products that are not advertised in at least some of them are hardly advertised in this way at all, although they may be in newspapers or in direct ways, such as sampling, demonstrating, etc.]

Trouble in the Rennet Bottle

Unless a man knows how to make Rennet, every bottle he turns out stores up a world of trouble for the retail grocer.

Nothing is more delicate than Rennet, nothing harder to make or to keep.

James T. Shinn's Liquid Rennet, to begin with, is as clean as we would want Rennet to be. It is so clean that we guarantee it against spoilage. And it is probably the quickest Rennet made — it will coagulate milk in five minutes.

Surely a grocer should be willing to handle such a superfine article on a small profit — but Shinn's Rennet pays 100%.

Why stand ye here idle when you could be selling this great good thing?

Show Our Samples to Anybody

If you say you can't buy Tea and Coffee by mail of us because you don't know much about them and have to depend on the salesman, we ask you why you can't depend on us. We believe we can show that we are worthy of your confidence.

But if you aren't convinced of that, we will permit you to show any sample of ours to whoever you like. Let them tell you what they think it's worth.

We know we can save you money, because it isn't debatable that you can sell by mail cheaper than you can sell through salesmen.

Why Imperator Will Outsell

There may be other head rice about as fancy as Imperator, but it's apt to be coated with talc and glucose, while Imperator is uncoated. Take this as almost a guarantee:—that you will sell more Imperator rice than you will sell of any other brand, first because it's natural, second because it's exceedingly high grade.

Imperator and its idea make fine window display material.

From the American Fair Trade League.

New York, Nov., 3, 1915.
To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—My attention has been called to an article appearing in your issue of the 25th inst. under the caption, "The Association Says After Investigation, That Retailers Do Not Favor Stevens Bill." I trust that in fairness to both sides you will be willing to give the following reply as much prominence as you did the article to which it is an answer.

Mr. Pinkham's statements are:—

"Such a law would prohibit low retail price opportunities to the consumer who wishes to economize. It would, for example, prevent important seasonal reductions in prices upon which most housewives depend—especially those of limited means."

Nothing of the sort. Price cutters of standard articles necessarily reimburse themselves by overcharging on unbranded and unknown wares and families who patronize them are victimized; merchants, to exist, must maintain an adequate average of profit.

"It would give the manufacturer the right to name the retailer's purchasing price and his selling price, thereby controlling his profits. Thus the manufacturer could arbitrarily raise his price to the merchants while keeping the retail price at a fixed figure, or even reduce the latter, thereby curtailing the profits of the merchant. It is contrary to the understanding which has always existed that a person who purchases an article outright has a right to do with it as he deems best, and, in the case of the retailer, to resell it at any price to the mutual advantage of himself and his customer. It does not take into consideration the different conditions under which an article might be resold."

Absolutely contradicted by the trade fact that on no price maintained standard product has the price been raised; on the contrary, on all such goods the manufacturer is giving to-day more and more for the money as competition among manufacturer in quality increases. For instances, a package of Kellogg's Toasted Corn Flakes is one-half larger and one-third less in price than it was ten years ago—the Ingersoll watches have greatly improved and have been reduced in size and thickness nearly one-half during the same period. This same increase in quality, per $1 of cost, under the standard price system, is convincingly shown in the automobile industry, in which all products are marketed under the maintained price systems and in which, nevertheless, prices are constantly falling and qualities constantly rising.

Yours faithfully,
EDMUND A. WHITTIER,
Secretary American Fair Trade League.

To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—Replying to yours of recent date in which you ask relative to the Twin City Wholesale Grocery Co. of St. Paul, would say that according to our understanding of the matter, this is one of a chain of some thirteen similar stores throughout the United States.

We really know very little about this proposition aside from the fact that they are apparently doing a rather good business and that they number among their officers some of the representative grocers and general merchants of the Northwest as well as a few in the Twin Cities.

We understand that at their annual meeting held recently the officers and members expressed themselves as being well satisfied with the volume of business done during the first year of their existence.

Government Will Go After "Adulterated" Oranges and Grape Fruit.

Gives Warning That Fruit Which Has Been Artificially Colored, so as to Appear Ripe, by Exposure in a Warm Room, will be Considered Illegal.

Special Correspondence of "Modern Merchant and Grocery World."

Washington, D. C.,

November 5, 1915.

The Department of Agriculture has been requested by growers and shippers to define its position with respect to the application of the Federal Food and Drugs Act to the transportation in interstate commerce of immature oranges and immature grapefruit. These requests have been accompanied by requests for modification of the tests announced by the Department for determining whether oranges and grapefruit are immature.

Oranges and grapefruit in common with other articles of food, in the opinion of the Department, are adulterated "if they are mixed, coated, colored, powdered or stained in a manner whereby damage or inferiority is concealed." The only announcement of the Department affecting the shipment of immature citrus fruits with which growers and shippers are at present concerned is that given in Food Inspection Decision 133. In that decision the view was stated that green, immature oranges which have been artificially colored by holding in a warm, moist atmosphere for a short period of time after removal from the tree are colored in a manner whereby inferiority is concealed and are therefore adulterated. In the opinion of the Department, grapefruit which have been similarly treated also are adulterated. The Federal Food and Drugs Act prohibits the shipment in interstate commerce of such oranges and grapefruit.

The Department therefore gives warning that the transportation at sale in interstate commerce of oranges or grapefruit which have been artificially colored by sweating or otherwise so as to conceal damage or inferiority will be regarded as in violation of the Federal Food and Drugs Act and proceeding under that act will be instituted in all cases where sufficient evidence obtained to justify such action.

A Big Success.

he new all-metal McCaskey Safe ister introduced last December has its way rapidly from coast to coast, large sales are reported from all rters.
his Safe Register is the latest prodof the McCaskey System. Nearly merchants are familiar with this sys-in its one-writing simplicity, ac-cy and speed, as housed in the some quartered oak cabinets in use thousands of merchants—and the Register does not change the sysidea at all, but furnishes a new housing, a container which removes the anxiety from fire ever present in the minds of storekeepers, not only for their stock of goods, which can be insured, but more particularly for their accounts receivable, which cannot be insured.

While it is true that the metal leaves from the oak McCaskey Cabinets can be removed and placed in the safe at night, it is equally true that a proportion of both employers and employees forget to do this. And it is therefore infinitely safer to have these records in a fire-resisting cabinet.

The years of costly development spent by experts in the development of the McCaskey Safe Register would make a long story. Briefly, it is of cold drawn steel, not a single joint—except where necessarily top and bottom meet. The walls are double, filled with a secret insulating composition, not asbestos, which has stood the most severe fire tests to which it could be subjected. These walls are only one inch thick and the cabinets therefore rest easily on the merchant's counter and can be shifted to suit changing conditions in the store equipment.

It is rather trite to say this Register "fills a long-felt want," but such is the truth, and the big plant of the Mc-Caskey Register Co. is being taxed to supply the trade with its new Safe Register.—Advt.

e and not a name hard to remem-something like "Rusty Leaf," or

"Cedar Hill" or "Brown Vale." A narrow yellow and black label posted on the jar giving this name would naturally help make your cider popular.

A sweet cider ad. will be mailed to the "Grocery World and General Merchant" this week and if the advertising manager considers it worthy his page, it may be reproduced there.

If you find it of any assistance to you, and you can consistently apply it, go ahead.

But cider is only one thing. Think of the splendid opportunities we men have of pushing things—two, three, six at a time. Each season, each week, you might say, brings goods which must be talked and must be shown and made attractive looking.

Take California figs, for instance—a dozen 10-cent packages in a box. Put 25 of these boxes in your window with a big 10-cent sign and see how they move. We are writing from actual experience.

Coming back to cider. Did you say,
"The boss objects to having a common barrel of anything displayed in the store"?

Well, not if he's the kind of a boss
I work for, and the kind most of us work for, because there is nothing that comes in a barrel that we know anything about, outside the booze stuff, that pays a better profit.

KNIGHT'S FLAVORING EXTRACTS have been pleasing epicures throughout the United States for fifty-nine years. The name Knight on an extract package is a stamp of excellence. Thousands of families can be induced to use nothing else. Most grocers sell them; if you don't, do so now and you will find that the goods not only sell themselves, but that your extract trade will increase. You cannot make a better profit on any

These Manufacturers Will Graciously Send Retailers Advertising and Display Matter

In various ways the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" has always directed the especial attention of its readers to the question of pushing nationally advertised products to the front. Monthly Contests have been held on the subject, and a half-page advertisement published weekly contains arguments by nationally-known manufacturers for featuring nationally advertised products in order to get the benefit of the extensive advertising which these manufacturers are doing for them. In connection with this retailers will want to know what manufacturers will supply advertising and display matter free of charge, hence the following list:—

The A. Colburn Co., Philadelphia. The Grocery Markets

Tea.

The tea market has shown no regular change during the week, although low grade green teas are somewhat firmer. The consumptive demand for tea is good considering the season.

Coffee.

The coffee market is firm. There is buying considerable Brazilian coffees, and that has advanced No. 7s almost a half cent per lb. Santos coffee is also a substantial fraction higher on this account and also because of better domestic demand. There is not so much low grade coffee about. The market is also strengthened on account of heavy European demand. The price of Caracas is almost off the market and prices average from 1 to 2 cents above the point ruling some time ago. Java and Mocha are unchanged and quiet.

Sugar.

The sugar market shows no change for the week. All refiners are still quoting granulated at 5.35. Raw sugar, under the pinch of scarcity, has sold at high as 4.59. Although the market is somewhat firmer than that now. The consumptive demand for refined sugar is firm, refined advanced to 5.50. The market is firm at 4.51.

Syrup and Molasses.

Corn syrup remains unchanged for the week. Compound syrup in fair demand at ruling quotations. Sugar is unchanged and firm. Molasses is quiet at ruling quotations.

Fish.

The mackerel situation is not very good, speaking particularly of the Norway mackerel. Spot stock is of course lower than it was a week ago as it has had no accessions. The market shows no change and is firm and high. The situation for Norway mackerel shows no recession in price. The catch in shore mackerel has been very good for the last two weeks. The market is so bare, however, that prices have advanced rather than declined. Cod, hake andaddock are in fair demand at firm prices. Salmon shows no change; demand quiet. Domestic sardines continue much unsettled on account of light supplies. Prices firm. In domestic sardines the carton and higher grade goods are ruling relatively higher than usual in comparison with the ordinary grades.

Canned Goods.

Tomatoes show no change, although the statistical position is very firm, as published last week. The demand is fair and predictions of very much higher prices within the next few months are freely made. If there is any demand for tomatoes at all, it is difficult to see how the market can stay where it is. Corn is steady to firm, as the supply is undoubtedly smaller than it ought to be. Peas continue somewhat heavy and quiet. Apples unchanged and dull. California canned goods show no change either in primary or secondary markets. The market is rather heavy. Small Eastern staple canned goods unchanged and dull.

Dried Fruits.

Prunes are a shade higher on the coast, although they show no radical advance. In the East, although shipments are coming in, prices have not yet receded. They will, however, as soon as supplies become substantially better. The raisin combination has advanced bulk seeded raisins $\frac{1}{4}$ cent, but there is no other change. The demand for raisins is good. Currants continue very scarce and very high. Peaches and apricots are unchanged.

Butter.

There is a good active consumptive demand for butter and the receipts are lighter than they were a week ago. The market is very firm at an advance of 1 cent per pound. The quality of the butter arriving is averaging good for the season and the entire situation is healthy on the present basis. The trade looks for higher prices in the near future, both on solid packed and prints, Pennsylvania and Western butter.

Eggs.

The egg market is firm at 2 cents advance. There is a good consumptive demand and extremely light receipts of new laid eggs. The demand for storage eggs is fair and the market is firm but unchanged.

Cheese.

There is a normal consumptive demand for cheese and as the neighboring markets have advanced $\frac{1}{2}$ cent on good grades, the local trade is expecting the same. Stocks of cheese are normal for the season and the consumptive demand is good.

Beans and Peas.

The market for pea beans is easing off on account of better supplies. The market in Michigan in a large way f. o. b. is $3.45, which is a substantial drop from the highest point. On spot the quotation is $3.75, which is also a drop from the highest point. Marrows are still ruling on spot at $5 per bushel in a large way, but can be bought to come forward at about 10 cents less. California limas are unchanged and dull. Green and Scotch peas have both receded about 10 or 15 cents a bushel on account of larger supplies.

Provisions.

Smoked meats are all steady and unchanged in price with a normal consumptive demand. Pure lard is steady at a decline of a quarter cent. So is compound. The declines were due to the fact that prices have been held too high and the trade did not respond. Stocks are now ample and no further change of any moment is looked for in the near future. Dried beef, canned meats and barreled pork are all unchanged.

INDIVIDUAL MARKET REPORTS.

Standard Canned Goods.

The feature this week in the market here was the publication by the Tri-State Canners' Association of the statistics of the tomato pack this season by its members in Maryland, Delaware and New Jersey, by far the three largest canning States in this country. According to their report, the output was below 50 per cent. of the output of the same canneries in 1914 and below 55 per cent. of the output in 1913. Those canners represent the most important houses engaged in the business in the States named, which have always canned about 60 per cent. of all the tomatoes produced in this country. The official statistics of the National Canners' Association, for the entire United States and Canada, will be published around December 1st, and there is keen interest in the outcome shown by the jobbers, canners and brokers alike. If such a large shortage, or anywhere near it, is shown throughout the country, the course of the market prices during the winter months and next spring will not be based on guess-work.

During the first three days of last week the tomato market showed an inclination to ease off, both as to the demand and the prices, and alert buyers quickly absorbed some good bargains that were available. In the last half of the week the market became fairly active again, and the bargain counter was quickly cleared. When an opportunity occurs to pick up any good quality tomatoes at a fraction under the going prices take them in and there will be no regrets. No substantial break in the prices may be looked for, and, from the present outlook, no lower prices may be expected. The Western jobbers were again the largest buyers this week, but the Eastern jobbers are not slow to take hold "when the spirit moves them." Further rumors are abroad about large buying of tomatoes for export.

Low prices for first-class quality sweet potatoes continue to attract numerous orders, and it was the most active article this week in the list of vegetables, excepting tomatoes. As a matter of fact, the buying of the other items was less active this week than in the previous week, except on one or two days when corn was fairly active. It was a dull week, comparatively, for the other canned vegetables, and there were no developments in them of more than ordinary interest.

The orders for canned fruits were again light this week. Straight carload shipments of any one article were not in evidence. During October the fashion has been to make up carlots by including several lines of fruits, and while that character of buying wears away the stocks held here, it seldom causes any advance in prices until almost the last case has been sold. Pie grated pineapples is an illustration. There ought to be enough of them to supply the demand until next spring, but here in the month of October the Baltimore canners are sold out of them. The quality of the new pack of pears is very good, and they are worth attention. The buying of apples and peaches is remarkably light.

The fall canning season for oysters is on. Reports from the oyster beds are unfavorable and they indicate a higher cost for the new stock.

THOS. J. MEEHAN & Co.

Baltimore, Md.

Rice.

Good demand continued during the week. The call is for "all sorts and conditions" of rice. The constant withdrawal for consumption has left stocks not over well assorted. Buyers are taking freely of what they think "will do as well" in the absence of what they really desire. Medium Honduras and Japans have advanced sharply under light receipts. Choice fancy Honduras has again advanced and is in short supply. The export inquiry is broadening, but sales are difficult on account of higher values.

Advices from the South along the Atlantic coast show continued active demand, especially on Carolina rices, which are considered at that point to represent better value than similar grades from the Southwest.

At New Orleans the market during the past week shows a further advance on all grades. Prime fancy Honduras, even at the sharp advance, is not obtainable, all lots offered being snapped up instantly. Japans, Blue Rose and broken rices have advanced a full quarter over last week.

In the Interior, Southwest Louisiana, Texas and Arkansas, the market continues to harden on all styles, especially Honduras. The Rice Growers' Association advised the mills that Blue Rose rough would be advanced 25 cents a barrel on November 1st, which will compel the millers to advance values a full $\frac{1}{4}$ cent. All mills are sold ahead and in consequence are very firm in their views, at the recent advance—a few mills have refused to book any more business until they catch up on their shipments.

D. TALMAGE'S SONS Co.

New York and New Orleans.

Spices.

The market has been exceedingly active during the week. The demand has been large and prices have been fluctuating steadily. Peppers, cloves and seeds have advanced. The situation as to ocean freights is more serious than ever before and indications point to still higher prices throughout the list.

Pepper.—The market has advanced steadily. Prices abroad are higher than in effect here. White peppers are lagging some little, but we believe will soon be higher on account of urgent trade needs.

Red Peppers.—Are exceedingly scarce and higher prices will rule for some time.

Cloves.—It is reported that shippers are having much difficulty in procuring freight room for shipment from Zanzibar. Stocks here are scarce and prices have advanced.

Pimento (Allspice).—Is slowly working upward. The article has advanced fully $\frac{1}{4}$ cent per pound and will go higher.

Mace.—Unchanged and in fair demand.

Nutmegs.—Exceedingly scarce, particularly 105-108, as well as 80s. We believe nutmegs are going higher. Surely present prices are safe.

Cassias.—Saigon unchanged. All grades of Batavia bark have advanced. Ceylon cinnamon is firmer.

Green Ginger Root.—Is slow of sale at present. There is some little to be had at low prices.

Paprikas.—Prices remain steady. There has been a good demand covering all other grades. Hungarian is still out of stock.

Tapiocas.—Unchanged during the week. In fair seasonable demand.

Seeds, Herbs, Etc.—Stocks of caraway, poppy, cummin and mustard are all small. All of these seeds are firm and higher prices are probable. Thyme, savory and marjoram have advanced during the week.

McCORMICK & Co.

Baltimore, Md.

Imported Fish Specialties.

Holland Herrings.—Our hopes of a large catch have vanished, and so have our expectations of lower prices. A lot of mines have been laid off late in the waters wherefrom the Holland herrings are usually taken, causing fishing to be a very dangerous affair, and it is believed to that is owing the practical impossibility of fishing operations. The demand from the countries at war continues so brisk that it far exceeds the supply, consequently prices instead of going lower have gone higher.

The first arrivals of new autumn Norway mackerel have arrived, but we have not seen the quality as yet, as the goods have not been unloaded from the steamer, but we know what the prices are, and they are away above those which have prevailed during the last few seasons. Still, the catch in Norway has been so extremely small that those who want Norway mackerel will simply have to pay the prices or do without them. But taking into consideration the enormous prices paid for all kinds of herrings, prices for Norway mackerel are really proportionately cheap.

There has been practically no fishing of sardines of late in Norway, and while the usual winter fishing should have started in by this time, there is no sign of it as yet. Stocks here of Norway sardines are nearly exhausted, and hardly anything is coming forward from Norway, because we simply cannot afford to pay the prices which they are asking, and which they are getting readily from Germany and from other countries now at war.

Prices for other Norwegian canned goods, like kippered and tomato herrings, fish balls, etc., have advanced in like proportion, and stocks are very limited in first hands.

Portuguese sardines are getting to be quite scarce, owing to our inability to secure new supplies at halfway reasonable prices. French sardines are practically out of the market. French sprats are absolutely unobtainable, and prices now asked by the packers are prohibitive.

War's Changes in Marketing of Brazilian Coffees.

A comparison of the total exports of Rio and Santos coffee from Brazil during the year ended July 31, 1915, with the first 12 months of the European war, with the exports of the 12 months immediately preceding the war, shows a decrease of only 7.7 per cent., or 1,066 bags, with a total shipment of 13,401,515 bags. The United States continues as the chief purchaser of Brazilian coffee, the exports to this country being 5,880,619 bags, an increase of 62,991 bags, of which 46,000 were re-exported to Havre. The exports from Brazil to France, were second in importance, amounting to 1,808,815 bags, a decrease of 93,832 bags, or 4.9 per cent. The shipment of 1,933,373 bags to the Scandinavian countries shows a remarkable increase of 489 per cent. The greater part of this was taken by Sweden alone, its imports of 1,300,000 bags, being an increase of 1,100,988 or 447 per cent. over those of the preceding year. Italy took 688,252 bags, an increase of 447,408, or 186 per cent. The shipments to Great Britain were 479,701 bags, an increase of 207,208 or 76 per cent. No shipments were made to Germany, Austria or Belgium, countries to which in the preceding year the aggregate exports were 3,400,000 bags.

You Want to Do What We've Done, But You Can't

Harisco Standardized Coffees are exactly what you want your Coffees to be, and exactly what you have always tried to make them—a list of standard and fancy grades and blends, rigidly kept uniform from one year's end to another.

We don't know any way in which your Coffees can be kept that way, outside of handling Harisco Standardized Coffees. The average coffee jobber of course aims to make his Coffees uniform—everybody does. But he cannot do it. He hasn't the machinery, or the patience, and often he hasn't the money. You know by experience with the average jobber how seldom he succeeds in this.

You can work to get a customer tied up with Harisco Standardized Coffee as hard as you like, with absolute certainty that that customer will stay put.

Blaming It on the Wrong Thing.

There's a fellow out in Pennsylvania not far from Harrisburg who is talking night and day against the chain stores. You can't stir him up to talk about anything else, not even votes for women. Start him on anything else and maybe he'll go along for thirty seconds, but after that he's back again on the chain stores.

If he don't look sharp, he'll go crazy about 'em inside of three months.

This man had a grocery store in a town where three chain stores have opened up. First there was one. He got along all right with that—it was in the other end of his town, and I don't believe it hurt him much.

But then another one opened up in his end of the town and that did hurt him. By and by another came right near him and to make a long story short, he had to close up. He's a man maybe fifty years old, he ain't got much money, and while he's got a job, it ain't a very good one. He figures out that the chain stores cut his throat, and he calls 'em everything he can think of.

The fact is the chain stores didn't kill him at all. It was mostly his blamed filthy way of running his store. I don't say they wouldn't have hurt him some—I suppose they would—but they wouldn't have killed him—that I'll take my oath on, because they ain't killed some of the other stores out there.

His store was the one that deserved to be killed most, because it was the dirtiest.

Did I tell him that? No, I didn't—life's too short. What good would it have done to tell him then? I know that some people did tell him while he was doing it, and it didn't do any good. He used to say—I've heard him say this much—that you couldn't run a grocery store clean.

Which as you and me know, is plain bunk.

Why you clean fellows have no idea of the way that store used to be kept. I've seen aprons on his clerks that looked like they come out of some garage. Why didn't his wife get into it? He didn't have any wife; he lived with his mother, who was an old woman that never went out of her house. Chance is a wife wouldn't have done any good—he'd have told her you couldn't run a grocery store clean and to mind her own blamed business. That's the kind of a hairpin he is.

Did I ever tell you what the wife of another customer of mine did once? He was another easy-going duck that thought you couldn't run a grocery store clean, and that people expected it to be cluttered up and so on. His wife come from Portland, Me.—you know what those down east women are about keeping clean. She and him had some scraps about it. They tell me she used to go down there in the day time and go on something fierce—right before customers—about why didn't he clean up this and clean up that.

You can't get anywhere with that, you know. She simply made him mulish, and one night she and a couple of scrub women went down there unbeknown to him and worked till 2 o'clock in the morning washing and cleaning up. The next morning when he went in there he thought he'd got in somebody else's store. Then so many people taffied him about it during the day that he started to tumble and after that it was different.

You can't beat the women when it comes to keeping clean. That is, some women. I've seen some things in skirts that I wouldn't touch with a ten-foot pole. And I ain't over-finicky either.

If you ask me, I think a dirty woman is the dirtiest thing on earth. And a clean one is the cleanest. But I don't think it's up to a woman to have four fits just because a hard-working salesman's shirt gets a bit sweaty, do you? How can he help it if he's only got one shirt? Understand, I ain't talking about myself. Not at all, I've got two shirts—an outside shirt and an undershirt.

Now that's the reason a grocer ought to be ten times as finicky—he's selling to the sort of people that know clean places when they see 'em, don't you see.

If I had a store and was dealing with blind men or kids under ten years old, I wouldn't care a blame how the place looked—I'd be comfortable and easy as a little in a puddle. And if I in my business had to meet up with two buyers, you can bet I'd dress me up all right. I'd have my pressed and my bald place polished up with 3-in-1 all the time. I'll hand it to you fellows—don't seem to care a ding when I come in with last year's collar or not. And a sweaty shirt or days too. I've handed you fellows many a sweaty shirt and you never kicked. Maybe because yours were worse. What can I do—I can't sweating, can I? Sure I can't—Professor Sweater from the Swerville Seminary—I can't sweating in all foreign languages. I sweat in places where nobody sweat before. I can't help it—the only thing I could do would I pour a quart of musk cologne in the sweaty places. I tried that and darned near suffocated. What else—I could get it was By George, that's so, ain't it? Funny I never thought of that before; I'll try that sometime when ain't too busy.

Weekly Window Display Suggestions

Buckwheat Flour.

Begin with the front of the window, placing bottles of honey as seen at either side of the three honeycomb squares. Display packages of buckwheat flour in semi-circles. On a neatly covered box with a sign, "Hot Buckwheat Cakes for Breakfast," make a mound of loose buckwheat flour. Back of the box are cans of syrup. Arrange twelve-pound bags of buckwheat flour at the sides toward the back. Finish window with a curtain of crepe paper.

YOU have had your trouble and loss involved in storing and handling bulk powdered and confectioners' sugar.

A damp floor or rainy week meant caking, sometimes a solid sugar mass, in barrel, bag or box. In these, when once opened, the store broom or any passing breeze deposited dust and dirt only too visible against the fine white grain of the sugars.

You can change all this in a day.

Put on your store shelves, and your customers' pantry shelves, the moisture proof, dirt proof, wax paper lined cartons of Crystal Domino Powdered and Crystal Domino Confectioners' sugars.

Each carton holds one pound; packed 24 in a fibre container.

Guaranteed pure cane and full weight, like all of the Crystal Domino Sugar Products.

IN WRITING TO ADVERTISERS KINDLY MENTION "MODERN MERCHANT AND GROCERY WORLD"

336.—Waging a Campaign Against Dishonest Advertising.

A correspondent advises me that an association of New York retailers has begun a campaign in that city against the fraudulent advertising with which the New York papers reek. Although New York State has had its honest advertising law longer than any other State, it has been grievously lax in enforcing it. There has been some enforcement of it, but nothing in comparison to the need of it.

The case which has now been brought is typical of the sort of advertising which many New York stores, large and small, do. The proprietor of a men's furnishing store on Broadway put some advertising in his window which represented that he was selling Manhattan shirts. As a matter of fact, he did not even handle them. His effort was to steal the reputation of the brand. Of course he will be convicted, as nothing could be clearer evidence of intended fraud.

The chief advertising fraud of the New York stores, as of the large stores of all other cities, however, is of a different sort. It is the advertising of merchandise at a certain price, and "worth" so much more. The fraud formerly took the form of advertising at a certain price merchandise "reduced from" some higher price. This involved more risk, because it was not a matter of opinion whether a thing had been reduced or not. The real value of a thing, or whether it is worth so much, is more of an opinion, therefore there is much greater latitude for misrepresentation which the advertiser argues will not be legal fraud. He is right in part but not altogether.

This sort of fraudulent advertising has become almost epidemic, and obviously something will have to be done about it in the near future. In States having honest advertising laws, as most States now have, the remedy is in those laws. In States now having no honest advertising law, the remedy is to have one passed, or failing that, to get evidence against the fraudulent advertisers and arrest—or sue—they for false pretense.

I had a clerk recently go over the advertisements of five Philadelphia department stores for one day. They were mostly page advertisements—sometimes double pages—and in all those five pages there was but one article (Victor talking machines) which was not advertised at such and such a price, "real value" so much more. On the five pages there were one hundred and sixty-nine articles, every one of which was offered considerably below what was said to be its regular price and actual value. That in many cases the representations were fraudulent and the advertising dishonest, is as certain as anything can be.

I have been greatly surprised that associations of smaller retailers do not go after these big concerns who get much of their business by promising more than they perform. The small store would have nowhere near as much trouble to compete with the large store if the latter were honest in its advertising. The little store often does a wholly neighborhood business and does not advertise at all. The big store has its spreading pages every day in which $1 silk is offered at 69 cents, $10 suits at $7.79, and so on. The small store has no equal way of meeting this underhanded competition, and it must lose out again and again.

I have already pointed out in a previous article that an advertisement offering regular $1 silk for 69 cents, when the silk is not $1 silk, is a criminal false pretense, and if it can be proven, as it should easily be, the advertiser can be arrested for it, whether there is an honest advertising law in his State or not.

I say further that the representations made in an advertisement as to quality and real value are warranties, and if they are not true, you can get at the dishonest advertiser in that way also. He can be sued civilly for breach of warranty. There are many cases which hold that goods described as of certain quality are warranted to be of that quality. While that mostly means cases where goods would be represented, for instance, as "all wool" or as "pure honey," it would include, in my judgment, cases where silk was advertised as "usual $1 quality."

And there are other cases which hold that it is also a warranty to advertise something as having certain value. This directly covers the very widespread advertising practice—"Price, 69 cents, real value $1." This is a binding warranty that the article is worth $1. If it is not, the buyer can sue for breach of warranty. Naturally the damages to be recovered would not be great, but the moral effect of a suit, accompanied by a threat that there would be others if the practice was continued, would probably be very great indeed. Of course every advertiser is given some latitude to become extravagant in his goods. He can claim the general terms, to be "worth more than his price without committing any fraud. But when he sells something as having a definite value," the law will hold him

Becomes Operative Next January 1st, and Makes all Retail Merchants Within the State Liable for Accidents to Their Employees While Latter are at Work.

[Inasmuch as the new Pennsylvania Workmen's Compensation Law which becomes operative next January 1st, affects every grocer and general storekeeper within the State, the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" will publish from time to time some possible cases which may arise under it, in the experience of the average grocer or general storekeeper. A full digest of the act was published in the issue of July 26th last. Readers hereof will remember that it practically makes it compulsory for employers to pay damages to employees who meet with accidents in the course of their regular work.—Ed.]

Possible Case No. 7.

Jones & Brown, retail grocers, deliver their goods by wagons. One of their drivers is William Smith, who goes out one morning with a load. While passing down the street with a heavily loaded wagon, he collided with a motor truck, was thrown out under the truck and one leg crushed so badly that it had to be amputated. The cause of the accident was the careless driving of the truck, the driver being intoxicated. Smith was not at fault. He is married and has several children. His wages were $17 weekly.

Before the Workmen's Compensation Law passed, Smith would have no complaint whatever against his employers; they would not even be in the case. His case would be against the employer of the delivery truck driver, from whom he undoubtedly recover a very large sum. And in a case like this, the situation is not changed much by workmen's compensation. To be sure, employers accept the compensation principle as to all their employees; they will have to pay Smith 215 percent. of his wages for 215 weeks. But if they do not accept it, they probably not recover anything from them by suit. While the act prevents the employer from raising certain defenses which he could raise before, none of them are defenses which would arise in this case.

November 4, 1915.

ng on the commercial prosf the United States, cheese, and other butter fats are becoming important factors export trade after a long of comparative inactivity.
or twenty years ago the States was selling abroad
20,000,000 and 30,000,000 of butter, from 50,000,000 0,000 pounds of cheese, and 5,000,000 to 10,000,000 of imitation butter annually.

tedly the war was partly ree.

Butter, usually averaging about 3,500,000 pounds annually in our export trade, in 1915 went to nearly 10,000,000 pounds. During this period imports of butter were reduced by more than one-half, falling from a little less than 8,000,000 pounds in 1914 to less than 4-000,000 pounds last year.

American cheese, running at about 2,500,000 pounds a year, went to 54,000,000 pounds in the fiscal year 1915. Here also, as in the case of butter, the trade balance was transferred to the export side, for the year's imports of cheese last year totaled only 50,000-000 pounds, a decrease of 13,- 750,000 pounds from the total for 1914.

Exports of condensed milk, usually exported in sums valued at between $1,000,000 and $2,000,000 annually, in 1915 rose to $3,000,000 in value, the quantity (37,000,000 pounds) being double that of 1914.

Imitation butter contains, in addition to oleomargarine oil, some butter fat. The exports of this article also doubled, rising from 2,500,- 000 pounds in 1914 to 5,125,000 pounds last year.

England has become our largest foreign market for butter, cheese, and condensed milk, having taken 3,333,000 pounds of butter, out of a total export of 10,000,000 pounds; 48,500,000 pounds of cheese, out of a total export of 54,000,000 pounds;
and 4,000,000 pounds of condensed milk, out of a total export of 37,- 000,000 pounds. Canada, Cuba, Panama, Australia and Venezuela also take considerable quantities of American butter; Panama and the West Indies are important markets for our cheese; while Cuba, Belgium, the Netherlands, China,
Japan, Hongkong, Russia, Chosen, Panama and Brazil take large amounts of American condensed milk.

Making Approximately a Dollar Extra Profit on Each Case of Eggs Handled.

Comparatively few grocers seem to realize the fact that with a very little added effort they can gain from 75 cents to $1.50 extra profit on every case of eggs they sell. To some grocers this may seem more or less of an impossibility, yet the fact that it is to-day being done by hundreds of grocers in all parts of the country should be evidence enough to convince even the most skeptical.

How is it done? By grading the eggs sonable enough, isn't it? You sell oranges, lemons, corn, tomatoes and a hundred and one similar items according to size, why not eggs?

For instance, let us take a case of eggs and grade them as suggested. You will find that approximately two-thirds of them, or 20 dozen, are large. If the small eggs which will average, let us say, an ounce each, sell for 25 cents a dozen, then the large eggs averaging an ounce and a half should bring 37½ cents per dozen. But let us be conservative. Instead of charging 12½ cents additional for these larger eggs, let us suppose the grocer charges 5 cents additional, the customer, you will agree, is receiving exceptionally high value for her money and the grocer is gaining an additional profit of practically a dollar on each case of eggs.

This idea of selling eggs according to size is by no means a new one. Eggs by weight is the common custom in a great many foreign countries. In fact, certain of our own States have attempted to pass similar laws, but have met with strong opposition from the grocers' associations, for the reason that they realize that selling eggs by weight means buying eggs by weight, which will necessarily occasion a great deal of extra handling, with a marked tendency to further increase the tremendous yearly loss that already exists.

Those grocers who have adopted this more profitable egg-selling method have also made it a point to safeguard the extra profit gained by providing themselves with a complete system for safe egg handling that will not only prevent egg breakage, but that will enable them to deliver the eggs with the smallest possible outlay, both of time and money.

Eggs when properly handled are one of the most profitable lines that any grocer handles, and further high quality eggs are so much in demand that once a grocer builds a reputation for furnishing strictly fresh eggs, he finds he has one of the strongest and most appealing "leaders" that is to be found in the grocery business.

Present Status of Food Legislation.

Scarcely any two States have food laws in common,* and but few of the State food laws agree in all the essential features with the Federal Food Law. Uniformity of food law among the States can hardly be looked for at the present time, since the conditions differ so widely in the several States. Under the term "food legislation," as usually considered, are to be included not only food laws proper, but drug laws, sanitary laws, false advertising laws, weight and measure laws and various statutes which are intended for the prevention of deception, adulteration and unsanitary conditions in the manufacture, sale, distribution or handling of food products. Few States have adequate drug laws at the present time and many of these are not enforced. Not a State has secured the enactment of a law to control the manufacture and sale of patent medicines, one of the worst evils thrust upon the American people at the present time. The first essential for uniformity is in the establishment of definitions and food standards, and when these have been established and generally adopted throughout the country the lack of uniformity in food laws will be less noticeable, for with uniformity in practice many of the apparent conflicts in food laws will have disappeared.

The Carnegie Provision Co., of Carnegie, Pa., send in copies of their local paper, the "Carnegie Union"—a newsy little sheet, apparently—containing their advertisement. It measures 10 inches double column and is here reproduced about half the original size:

tising or not. I suppose if they are obviously lower than the same goods are usually sold for there, the advertising might get some results. Even then, however, I should not consider it calculated to get the most results. All advertising like this assumes that the price is ing Powder or Baker's Cocoa cents below the regular price, instance, you don't need to hint at the quality of the goods their well known quality and unusually low price together up the advertisement. But that is not so with "prime rib roast" most of the other goods advertised here. The advertiser's task, therefore, if his price on lard is several cents lower than usual, is to convince the public that his cheap is as good as the lard usually for more money. A great many advertisers forget all about that think the mere low price is enough. That is why, in my judgment, never good advertising to name quote cut prices, unless every advertised is well known. At the regular price should have given. The average person, seeing this advertisement, and especially well acquainted with current prices, would have no means knowing whether these goods are really specials or not. The advertisement would not do him.

If I were doing the Carnegie Co.'s advertising, I should change the style of my heading and introduction. I should wake 'em up with some good crisp head. "I'm Saving Chances for Saturday 16th." Or, "We'll Put More in Your Pocket Next Saturday 16th." Or "Read These Prices Then Get Your Basket Ready." Then a few lines of introduction emphasizing why you can get cheaper than your competitors you can. Then the specials, followed with a line of good strong talk about the regular and special price.

NOTE.—This department is devoted to the criticism of advertising matter, in, to the devising of new advertising ideas for special occasions, upon request, and to the suggesting of original advertisements when data is supplied. Communications sent for this department should be addressed to the Editor of Science of Advertising. They will be taken up in strict rotation.

As I can't tell how these prices compare with the customary prices at Carnegie, I can't say definitely whether this should be good advertising or not. I suppose if they are obviously lower than the same goods are usually sold for there, the advertising might get some results. A Sales Repeater is purchased, say, two or three times every week by the housewife who bakes. And every time she comes in for a "cake of yeast" you have a fine chance to talk up and sell her other things too.

THE VALUE OF BRIGHT STORES

¶ The difficulty of mak- ing a sale—whether it be dry goods or vege- tables, jewelry or shoes is increased tenfold in a poorly lighted store. Other things being equal, the Electrically lighted shop will do more business than the store which uses other illuminants. "Indoor Daylight" can only be obtained by the use of Mazda Electric lamps.

In Three Homes

When a grandmother, maintaining her own home, and her daughter, maintaining another home, and the daughter's daughter, main- taining a third home, all use Wheatena as a regular part of their daily food, what does it mean? Just what we have repeat- edly said, that Wheatena is peculiarly the food of succeeding generations and when it once gets in it is apt to run through all the branches of the family.

The hearts of selected wheat.

Here Is Your Question Answered

Why put in Croft's Swiss Milk Cocoa when you are selling five brands now? Well, because it is different from the rest, for one reason. It is the only cocoa packed in glass. It stands alone, and you know how novelty helps a thing to sell. The grocer who infuses a little novelty into his busi- ness is the grocer who suc- ceeds.

Another thing, Croft's Swiss Milk Cocoa is better than the rest. That isn't a bluff, honestly. We take out of our cocoa, in the making, a substance which other man- ufacturers allow in, greatly to the injury of the flavor of their goods.

Now do you know why you should sell it?

Will you mention the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" when you write?

How Do You Middlemen Like This Latest Scheme to Eliminate You?

Socialist Publication Presents Carefully Prepared Scheme to Start a State Exchange, Which Would Issue Bonds, Open Stores, and Sell Everything. Says "All" Retail Buying Would Be Done There Because Regular Retailers Would Be Destroyed.

"Pearson's Magazine" is of decidedly socialistic tendencies, and loses no opportunity to take a slap at the high cost of living and the middlemen's profit which it claims is responsible.

So far, these slaps have been simply raps, and no middleman would be especially put to it to stand them with perfect equanimity. Nor did they eliminate any middlemen. In its last issue, however, "Pearson's" presents a complete scheme to eliminate retail grocers by a sort of State Exchange, which would issue bonds, open stores and handle everything. As "Pearson's" says, "Practically all the retail buying will be done through the State Exchange, because no private dealer could afford to compete." What would become of the army of private dealer who could not afford to compete, "Pearson's" does not say, and apparently does not care. The fact that hundreds and thousands of established businesses would be ruined almost over night is always unimportant to the Socialist, who demands the elimination of the middleman.

The "Pearson" scheme is considered sufficiently interesting and unique to reproduce in part:—

1. A California farmer could get only 4½ cents per pound for his crop of dried peaches that COST him 5 cents per pound. He sent samples to a distant city and sold his crop, receiving from 6 to 11 cents per pound net f. o. b. his nearest railroad station. The following season the pleased customers wrote to engage his crop; he agreed to sell them, BUT—the local clique learned of his plan and brought influence to bear and prevented the consummation of the deal and the grower was forced to sell to the trust at a loss.

2. A California almond grower was offered 7 cents per pound on the local market, but thought he could sell to better advantage in the East. He sent samples to a merchant in Topeka, Kan., and the merchant said he had never seen as nice almonds on the market and the price asked was lower than he could buy for elsewhere, but he dared not purchase from the producer.

3. An Oregon apple grower received 70 cents per box for his apples. In packing them he placed a card in a box stating the price he received and asking the buyer to notify him what price he paid the dealer for the apples. In due time he received a letter stating that the consumer had paid $4 for the box. This is an unjust difference and the consumer pays the bill.

4. Another Oregon farmer hauled a load of the choicest assorted, hand-picked apples to the capital city of his State and was unable to sell them at all—at any price. Yet many people who really wanted apples could not buy them on account of the price demanded by the retailers.

Another Oregon apple grower shipped six carloads of apples, 630 boxes to the car, and received only 35 cents per box. The boxes, wrapping, assorting, etc., cost him about 25 cents per box, leaving him 10 cents per box for the apples, cultivating the orchard, picking the fruit, and interest on his investment. At the same time, the consumers were paying for these choice Spitzenburg and Baldwin apples from $1.50 to $4 per box.

An Oregon potato grower, after holding his crop for several months with the hope of securing a reasonable price, was forced to sell for 30 cents per sack (and furnish the sacks) at a time when wage earners in Portland, 50 miles away, were forced to pay from $1 to $1.25 per sack at the stores.

Hundreds of California peach growers were forced to sell their 1914 crop at 3 cents per pound, a net loss of 2 cents (40 per cent.) per pound, while the consumers were compelled to pay from 10 to 12½ cents—a profit to the middlemen of from 200 to 300 per cent.

Thousands of families do without these healthful articles because they cannot pay the exorbitant prices demanded—and the dealers or jobbers tell the producer there is no demand for them.

These wrongs are due to the present system.

Let us change.

The middleman MUST BE ELIMINATED from

Between the distant farmer and the consumer;

Between the woolen mill and the consumer;

Between the canner and the consumer;

Between the shoe factory and the consumer;

Between the implement factory and the consumer;

Between the flour mill and the consumer.

Prosperity and progress demand it.

Middlemen are all in the same class and neither the producer nor consumer has any use for them.

Let each State establish an Exchange, the duties of which will be to regulate the prices of all commodities passing through the Exchange; to establish and operate stores and warehouses; to buy, sell and exchange products of labor, farm products and goods and produce of every description in the transaction of a wholesale and retail mercantile business. To secure capital for establishing stores, sell a series of non-interest bearing five-year bonds at par, to be presented at any time after maturity in exchange for goods and entitling the holder to 25 per cent. discount on all articles received in exchange for the bonds.

It is a fact that in all well-managed stores the stock is sold out and replaced many times during the year, some of it every 30 days, some every 60 or 90 days, and some (very little) only once or twice a year.

Now, suppose the State Exchange charges an average profit of only 10 per cent. on all goods sold, and turns the stock an average of three times a year, the annual net profit would be 30 per cent. on the investment. In four years the stock would more than pay for itself and in the fifth year it would create a fund that would provide for the 25 per cent. discounts on the goods (premium on the bonds) and leave a margin of profit.

This plan would net the investor MORE than the same amount of Panama Canal bonds and, in addition, would have enabled him to save from 20 to 50 per cent. on all groceries, clothing, shoes, vehicles, implements, musical instruments, etc., purchased during each year of the five.

For illustration, suppose that Jones invests $100 in bonds of the five-year series. At the end of five years he would be able to purchase $125 worth of merchandise with his bonds. Then if Jones' family spends $500 per year in the stores, he would, by saving the 20 per cent. (at least) made possible through the Exchange, have $100 left after buying his supplies each year—making a gross saving of $500 plus the $25 premium on his Exchange bond.

Let the State Exchange establish a store and warehouse in every town in the State, with sub-stations where necessary.

By purchasing goods in immense quantities the Exchange would be able to sell to the consumer at about the price which the jobber or wholesaler now pays to the factory—thereby securing a reduction of from 20 to 50 per cent.

Private owned stores, to-day, spend millions of dollars for useless advertising—an expense that would be almost eliminated by the State Exchange.

The present system of spread-eagle advertising would be unnecessary because each citizen would know that the Exchange store would supply the best goods in every line at prices that could not be duplicated elsewhere—and many hours of tiresome shopping would be saved.

In the large cities the economy in advertising alone would in five years create a fund that would more than redeem all the bonds issued in establishing a great Exchange store. The present expensive duplication of show windows and other displays would be eliminated, and that would help in reducing the "high cost" of living.

Then, again, it is nothing unusual to see the wagons from several stores making deliveries at the same time at neighboring homes several miles out in the suburbs of the large cities, where one wagon could have made the deliveries at one-half the cost. This is another important saving that would cut the "high cost" still more.

Again, each private dealer in clothing, suits, shoes, etc., must buy an up-to-fad stock in all sizes, colors and styles, with the positive knowledge that a certain per cent. of the goods would still remain unsold when the next change in fashion arrived. Suppose, for instance, the original stock is $5,000 and the "left-over" stock amounts to 20 per cent., or $1,000, and that there are 20 private concerns, representing $100,000, handling these goods. There would then be left on hand an aggregate of $20,000 worth of goods—or as much stock as was required to furnish four stores in the beginning—while one Exchange store could have supplied the same customers with an investment of $40,000 and have concluded the transaction with only $1,000 or $2,000 worth of goods left on the shelves. And it is safe to say that the Exchange store, by eliminating the advertising expense of the other 19 stores, would have saved more than enough to offset the value of the "out-of-style" goods, thus making it possible to "clean up" in a special sale without loss on any article.

Let us vote a sufficient amount of State Exchange bonds without interest, to be issued, retired, re-issued and retired whenever and as often as the demands of business require. Let the bonds be non-interest bearing, then they will not hide away for the interest they can draw by idleness.

Let the Exchange offer a premium of 5 per cent. for all bonds presented in exchange for merchandise at the Exchange stores or warehouses—just as the merchant now offer 5 per cent. advantage to all customers for cash. All bonds (except the special five-year series) to be redeemable at any time.

Thus it will be seen that if you invest in a $10 5 per cent. bond or any of the bond issues outstanding to-day, you must hold it one year to earn 5 per cent., BUT if you invest $10 in a non-interest bearing Exchange bond and keep it merely long enough to pass it over the counter in exchange for goods, you have gained 5 per cent. The idea is startling, but the fact remains that the busy non-interest bond brings greater gain and prosperity than the choicest idle 5 per cent. bond.

Let the Exchange sell the bonds at par to all who desire to use them in exchange for goods, thus enabling wage earners, as well as the farmers to enjoy the benefits accruing from the existence and use of the bonds, and there will always be enough legal tender in the treasury of the Exchange to meet all demands from transactions outside the State.

Practically all the retail buying will be done through the State Exchange, because no private dealer could afford to compete, therefore all the legal tender now used in buying supplies could be drawn in this channel and a wonderful and substantial commercial improvement would result from the use of the bonds in the transaction of business.

Let the growers of grains, raising food stuffs, dried fruits, etc., instead of being forced to hold the crops or wait indefinitely for the money, deposit their products at the nearest Exchange warehouse and receive therefor a deposit certificate.

Then let the producer take his deposit certificate to the Exchange, treasurer and exchange it for bonds of an amount equal to the cost of his deposited products, with the agreement and knowledge that the Exchange will sell the products at the best possible price (more than the producer could possibly expect if he sold individually) and pay him at the time of sale whatever price they received in excess of the cost price—less the cost of handling

Increase your trade with Lipton's Tea—

Millions of housewives know from experience that tea in bulk never twice tastes alike; that the blend varies; that it absorbs moisture, foreign flavors and strange odors that happen to be near.

They will drink more tea when you teach them that the sealed air-tight package protects all the original flavor and strength, all the natural aroma of Lipton's Tea; that the blend of Lipton's Tea is delicious and uniform; that the leaf comes to them pure, clean and fragrant as when it left the Lipton Tea Gardens of the Far East.

LIPTON'S TEA

tea—
that's only half a word—the other half is LIPTON'S

They will buy more tea—Lipton's Tea—when you teach them that their particular tea taste is best met in Lipton's Tea because there are eleven delicious blends from which to choose—and that the second package they buy will taste just the same as the first.

Perhaps you have not given the thought it deserved to the good sense and the profit sense of selling package tea—Lipton's Tea—rather than tea in bulk. The package way of selling tea is the economical way. You waste no time in weighing, nor do you spill any about the counter. You throw in no extra pinches for generous good measure. There is no tea to spoil in an open bin. Lipton's packages are in handy sizes, pleasing to the customer—so are the prices.

Incidentally, our leadership as the largest tea growers in the world—on our own vast tea estates—has enabled us to maintain the same low price of Lipton's Tea, both to the dealer and consumer, though other teas in package and bulk have gone up in price. Lipton's quality is of the same high standard, of course: Here is another reason for your selling Lipton's Tea in the sealed, airtight packages.

Why a Manufacturer Should Be Permitted to Fix the Retail Price of His Product.

Views of Various Believers in This Doctrine Who Offer Them as Arguments for the Pending Stevens Bill.

[The "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" has obtained and will from time to time present a series of statements by various well-known persons who believe that the manufacturer should have the right to tell the retailer what price he must get for the manufacturer's product. All of the views which will be presented can be taken as arguments for the pending Stevens Bill, which seeks to give a manufacturer that right.—Ed.]

No. 7.—By Robert E. Miller, Lancaster, Pa.

Mr. Brandeis dwelt but briefly on the experience which the manufacturers of Cosmo Buttermilk Soap had endured owing to price cutting. As that manufacturer happened to be my father. I can possibly speak with a little better authority, or, rather, a somewhat fuller knowledge of the whole matter, and, as the case is a typical one and has already been used in an article by William Hard on "Better Business" in the May, 1914, number of "Everybody's Magazine," I will quote this case and the conditions surrounding it.

Cosmo Buttermilk Soap was a famous soap in its day. Its regular price, retail, was 10 cents. That was the price at which the manufacturers asked the retailers to retail it. The public bought Cosmo Buttermilk Soap at 10 cents, compared it on its own account with other 10-cent soaps, decided that it was a good soap at the price, and then came back and bought it again—and again.

Cosmo Buttermilk Soap became prosperous, competitively, and its name, its trade-mark, became valuable—so much so that its owners were offered more than a quarter of a million dollars for it and declined. But there was a danger. The danger was in having any name at all. The danger was in being individualized.

Let me shift for just a moment from soap to coffee.

Here's a coffee, quite nameless, lying in a bin. Well, you can't hurt it, no matter what price you sell it at. And the ultimate consumer does actually buy it at 38 cents and goes her way still highly pleased with herself. She doesn't know that it also sells at 25 cents a pound.

These prices—38 cents and 25 cents—are taken out of real life.

Happy anonymous commodities. The ultimate consumer buys them at one price here to-day and at another price there to-morrow, and all is merry as an oriental bazaar. She can't remember anything against them because she can't remember them. She looks into their blank identical faces and there's nothing to remember them by. They can be sold to her at a score of different prices and she doesn't know it.

But: "Universal Department Store bargain sale. Cosmo Buttermilk Soap now 3 cents."

The ultimate consumer remembers that. "Cosmo Buttermilk Soap, 3 cents." The name and the price. Enter, then, lady into neighborhood grocery store.

Lady: "Cosmo Buttermilk Soap."

Grocer: "Ten cents."

Lady (sweetly): "Robber!"

And exit one lost lady customer.

Grocer sits down and writes to Cosmo Buttermilk Soap manufacturers:—

Gentlemen: You sell me your soap, like everybody else making standard articles, at price which gives me only narrow margin of profit. And now you let Universal Department Store, this city, sell your soap for 3 cents. If you look for any more business from me, you will be looking longer than I live. Please cancel the order I sent you yesterday. Everybody told me you was a snide firm; and now I know it.

Yours respectfully,

There are millions of such letters in the files of the manufacturers of individualized products.

The price of an individualized product is as much a part of its individuality as its name. Demoralize the price and you demoralize the product.

In Reading, Pa., there were 90 retailers handling Cosmo Buttermilk Soap. It wasn't a cut-price war. It was a mob massacre of a defenseless commodity. The price was trampled down to 3 cents and kept there as an advertisement for the retailers who were doing it and a quick death for Cosmo Buttermilk Soap.

Death—because in the end the reputation of Cosmo Buttermilk Soap was totally destroyed. All the ultimate consumers residing in that city got it marked down in their minds as a 3-cent product. It wasn't. It couldn't be made and sold at that price. But the public couldn't be got to go above that price again. Whereupon, its reputation having gone, its value as an advertisement for the retailers went too. As for the retail profit on it, that had gone long ago. There was nothing left in it. And 80 of the 90 dealers threw it out of their stores.

Reading was imitated by city after city. It was no longer a local massacre. It was a forest fire, catching and spreading. The firm which was manufacturing Cosmo Buttermilk Soap was not old enough or strong enough to make any effective resistance. Within two years virtually the whole of its area of distribution had been burned over and left bare.

A young firm, a new product, a competitive price, the public pleased. Just the kind of thing that must be fostered forever in order that industrial and commercial progress may never cease among us. Slaughtered—by the firm's own distributors, over whom it had no control.

Cosmo Buttermilk Soap was revived—a bit. But it has never come back to as large a sale in a month as it used to have in a morning.

How can it be said to be good for the public to be blocked off like that from a product it had proved it wanted?

It was an extreme case. It was extreme in the completeness of its finish. It was not extreme in any other way. There is not a community in the United States this moment in which the sales of well-known and widely wanted products are not being contracted by price-cutting.

This price-cutting may be done by local stores, or it may be done by distant mail-order houses. The result is the same. The same result. Retail profit in those products diminished or destroyed. Angry retailers. Fresh drummers who come into the retail store and says to the retailer: "Now, here's a product your customer doesn't know much about. But push it. There's a big retail profit in it for you." Substitutes. And the distributing channels through which the well-known and widely wanted products must reach the public artificially clogged and choked.

You will see from this instance that with every standardized article of merit goes the name and reputation of the manufacturer—in fact, without this name and reputation it is impossible to standardize an article—and it is not until a manufacturer has spent years of effort to perfect the article and enormous sums of money to advertise it that it is attacked by the price cut.

Let me emphasize this matter—the damage to the name and reputation of an article, which means an injury to the good will of the maker. If I was sure of the future sale of Hamilton watches, I would not care at what price a dealer sold the watches, so long as he took the name of Hamilton off them; and I feel that we have a right to demand this. You say, "Do you not sell the article to the retailer, and should he there not be allowed to do as he pleases with it?" It is true that legally the title has passed; but you sell more than the physical article itself—the name and the reputation back of it and all that that implies.

Enormous Food Crops This Year

The Government announces that the greatest crops in the history of the country will be harvested this year. Below is a comparison of this year's crop prospects and last year's; also the five-year average:—

Missing the Chance to Sell Fancy Goods and Make Fancy Profits

Canned Goods Case Which Shows That Some Grocers Fail to Make a Profit Because They Can't See the Possibilities. The Experience of a Jobbing House With a Brand of Tomatoes.

There are retail grocers who are asleep at the switch this very minute in the sense that their opportunity is lying neglected at their feet.

The manager of one of the grocer houses of a well known wholesale grocery company in the West had an experience one time with a grocer who was asleep. One of the grocer's salesmen several years ago had opened up an account in a small nearby town by placing the Hiawatha line of canned goods with a certain grocer. The account had gone along for a year or more but the volume of orders received from the merchant was disappointingly small. It was apparent that the grocer was not featuring the Hiawatha line. In the meantime the line was growing and it contained a considerable proportion of the best of people that buy and appreciate first-class quality in merchandise. The wholesale grocery salesmen from time to time urged the grocer to take a more active interest in the line. The disappointment was the part of the salesman and his manager was the keener by reason of the fact that other grocers in that town at different times had asked for the Hiawatha brand.

Finally one day the manager took a train and paid the grocer a visit. The manager walked into the store ahead of a customer. The customer was a young lawyer of the town and he advanced to the counter behind which the proprietor stood, and said:—

"We expect some people at the store tonight for dinner and my wife asked me to stop in and get some of tomatoes. She wants the best you have."

The proprietor took a can of tomatoes down from the shelf, and holding it before the customer said: "Here is a very good tomato at 15 cents."

The lawyer looked at the can somewhat skeptically and asked: "Is this the best you have?"

The grocer said, "No." He turned around to the shelf and brought down another can and set it on the counter with the remark, "This is 15 cents or two for a quarter."

Still the customer hesitated. "Are you sure this is the very best? I want something extra fine."

"Well, if you want the very best we have, you had better take these." He took down a can of the Hiawatha brand. "These are 20 cents."

The lawyer said promptly, "This is exactly what I want. I am not so particular about the price as I am about the quality."

After the lawyer had gone out with his can of tomatoes the manager stepped up to the grocer and introduced himself. He said:—

"Mr. ———, I came down here to find out what is the trouble with your canned goods business. I don't need to go any further. What I have seen convinces me that you do not appreciate the value of the Hiawatha brand to your business, and we shall have to take it away from you and place it in the hands of other grocers here who want it and who will give it the attention it deserves."

The grocer remonstrated. He promised that if the line were allowed to remain with him he would get behind the goods and feature them. He would guarantee a volume of business that would be satisfactory to the wholesale house. To his protestations the manager replied:—

"I am sorry, but it is too late. After what I have seen in your store with my own eyes nothing that you could say could convince me that you would ever do justice to our line, or to any other high grade line. You simply do not appreciate it. Here is a customer who must be typical of many others who come into your store. At the very outset he asks you specifically for the best quality you have. You show him the poorest. He almost has to fight with you to induce you to sell him what he wants and what he is perfectly willing to pay for."

WITH THE EDITOR

For years I have been in touch with food laws and food rulings.

The Limit.

I have seen some prime absurdities come across in that time, but the arch absurdity of them all is the ruling recently made by the United States Government as to California oranges, but now, as told elsewhere, happily abandoned.

The Government ruled that California oranges could not be shipped in interstate commerce unless they contained eight parts of soluble solids to one part of citric acid. The solids were the sugar, and the ruling therefore meant that California oranges must be just so sweet or they could not be sold outside of California. Can a greater absurdity be imagined?

Now that the Department of Agriculture has started in to criticise Almighty God to his face, for not putting enough sugar into his oranges, why not censor all the products of the Almighty? I confess to a dislike for a certain shade of red hair—an intimation should be given the Creator to make no more of it. As for that already made, the owners of it should be compelled to wear shaven heads or be put to death.

A New York chain store proprietor with sixty-six stores uses the following eulogy of his name as a sort of trade motto or slogan:

1. It means quality and purity in everything that is sold you.
2. It means very fair prices on every standard food article that can be bought in any honest grocery store or that any honest manufacturer makes.

3. It means one price to all and that price spot cash to everybody.

4. It means equal service to all polite salesmen, who take pride in their work and in keeping themselves scrupulously clean.

5. It means a clean store, where articles are kept clean all of the time and delivered to customers in a clean manner.

The thought struck me as I read this: every proper store ideal named here, and the store that filled them all would be pretty nearly a perfect store. And yet it might never get within even running distance of success. There must be something else. Define beauty in a woman: there must be a clear complexion, good teeth, handsome eyes and good hair. Yet a doll has these. When all the necessary constituents are present, there must then be breathed into the thing the fire that means success. Given the fire, success may come without a lot of the above ideals, but even if they are all present, it can never come without it.

Worth Reading and Remembering

No. 2.

Other storekeepers are getting rich with no better opportunities than you have.

Look into your way of doing things. See how the most successful merchants do business. Adopt the system that has increased profits for merchants.

Have a system in buying, a system in selling, and, above all, a system for handling your cash!

Here's where one trouble is—throwing the money into the drawer with no record kept. Paying it out again the same way, and never knowing the amount that should be there.

A careless, easy-going, reckless way, that eats up profits, destroying the very life of business.

My Views on the Stevens Bill*

I might not consider that my views on the pending Stevens bill would be considered sufficiently interesting and important to warrant me in expressing them, were it not that the Secretary of the American Fair (?) Trade League has for several weeks circulated over the United States, statements misrepresenting what I have said and written on the Stevens bill, and insinuating that I am representing price-cutters in some way and am therefore not unbiased in what I say.

*NOTE.—The Stevens Bill, now pending in Congress, will give to manufacturers the right to fix prices at which retailers shall sell those manufacturers' products.

Why the arch hypocrite! Is he unbiased? What does he represent but one side of the question—the side of the manufacturers who are paying his salary and who are all deeply concerned in having the Stevens bill passed—for their own benefit!

Now what I believe about the Stevens bill is this: I believe that no retailer should have a right to take the Ingersoll watch, for instance, which costs him, let us say, 69 cents, and cut it to 50, or 60 or even 69. He has no right because it isn't legitimate merchandising; he cannot sell the watch at that price and even come out whole. His cut is a deliberate, wanton act which, while it may benefit him, will injure the watch as a piece of merchandise so that other retailers will not and cannot handle it. And in turn the manufacturer of the watch will be injured and perhaps destroyed.

I am in favor of any law or plan which will prevent cutters from doing that kind of cutting—if it stops with that. The Stevens bill would undoubtedly stop that kind of cutting, but the trouble is it would do something more which would hurt more than the other would help. The Stevens bill would compel all retailers to sell the Ingersoll watch at $1, which is a higher price than many retailers want to sell or need to sell for. It would take the retailer who because he sells for cash or for some other reason, can easily afford to sell an Ingersoll watch for 90 cents, and would compel him to get $1 for it. In that I am not in sympathy with the Stevens bill. It robs a merchant of the value of his own initiative and mulcts the consumer out of money which there is not the slightest justification for requiring him to pay.

If the Stevens bill can be revised so that it will cure wanton and purposeless cutting without at the same time destroying the retailer's right to make proper price reduction, I am in favor of it. As it stands it is a bad bill and it will never pass.

AMONG THE TRADE.

William S. Grier, former bookkeeper for the Corby-Cobb Co., 15 South Front street, who embezzled a large sum of money from that concern, was on Tuesday sentenced to seven years imprisonment in the Eastern Penitentiary. He pleaded guilty to several indictments charging forgery and embezzlement.

For selling adulterated sausage, Abraham Rabinowitz, local manager of N. Zimmerman & Co., New York butchers, was fined $100 and costs during the week. The firm has an abattoir in Fairmount avenue above Fourth street.

George Boyd Kester, for many years a prominent tea merchant in this city, being a former member of the wholesale house of Irwin, Mc-Bride & Catherwood, died on Monday at his home, No. 2412 Spruce street, following an illness of only a few days. Mr. Kester, who was 78 years old, was stricken with heart disease last Friday. He had retired from active business several years ago.

Are You a Good Advertiser?—A good advertiser doesn't necessarily have to be a good ad. writer. We are all advertisers—good, medium or bad.

What, then, is good advertising? It's getting anything which leaves a favorable impression on the public.

It may be a good window show, a good sign, a neat store entrance, a clean counter, bright scales, clean sidewalk.

The things we say, the things we do, the constant ads, don't it a good thing to study this line of advertising?

Considering that it means so much to our employer and to ourselves, isn't it well to brush up and keep that way?

Grade Your Grapes.—If Malaga grapes are properly handled there is no loss in the fruit department that will not give a better margin.

It is the only kind to buy, and it can be graded into small, medium and large bunches, representing, of course, three prices. Stripping the large bunches should be avoided if possible; they should be weighed on a computing scale and sold by the bunch only.

Apples In a Punch Bowl.—The Jonathan apples that are now coming from the State of Washington in cases are very decorative. Their perfection of color appeals to every eye, but particularly to those who can afford the price. Transfer them from the box to the punch bowl and you'll sell twice as many; and by the same token, this applies to a very high-grade lemon.

Don't doubt this until you try it out.

Don't doubt any scheme of this kind until your own experience tells you that such scheme is N. G.

We are all too ready to act indifferently about simple suggestions, either because they appear too simple or because we are too lazy or too "set" to adopt them.

After Hours.—The man who has "no taste for reading" is to be pitied.

It was Oliver Goldsmith who said, "The first time I read an excellent book it is to me just as if I had gained a new friend; when I read over a book I have perused before, it resembles the meeting with an old one." Cultivate the reading habit and cut out this aimless street-wandering habit if you want to get some real pleasure out of life and the things that pertain to life. Hours and hours nightly wasted, when these hours could be improved by simply commanding the companionship of the mighty teachers and lofty thinkers of the past and present.

Go over to the library and pick out the book that appeals to you. History, travel, fiction, religion, business, astronomy, geometry—any book that you think would make you a better, brighter, more companionable man, you may have for the asking.

It's wicked to be ignorant.

Sugar Test for Oranges Abandoned by Government.

Following protests made by Representative Curry, of California, to Secretary of Agriculture Houston, a regulation of the Bureau of Chemistry that California oranges cannot be shipped in interstate commerce unless they contain eight parts of soluble solids to one part of citric acid, will be temporarily set aside. No attempt will be made by the Department of Agriculture to interfere with this year's interstate shipments of California oranges, no matter what their contents, as was threatened under the regulation. The Department will only prevent shipments of oranges that are heated, sweated or otherwise artificially colored. The regulation was made by Dr. Carl L. Alsberg, chief of the Bureau of Chemistry, last year and would have been effective against this year's crop of California oranges whenever the fruit did not measure up to the Alsberg arbitrary standard. Curry told Alsberg the Bureau had no lawful authority to fix an arbitrary standard for orange contents and demanded that the regulations be referred to Attorney-General Gregory for an opinion as to their legality. Alsberg refused to do so, and Curry and Carnes then went direct to Secretary Houston. It is probable that the regulation eventually will be revoked. Florida growers also have protested to Houston.

CORRESPONDENCE.

A Plea for the Stevens Bill.

Pittsburgh, Pa., Nov. 8, 1915.
To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—I think the Stevens bill should be passed. It is the only bill that will save the small retailer. What do the customers generally ask for when they buy from a small retailer? Nationally advertised goods. What do the cut-throat stores generally cut? Nationally advertised goods. The cut-price stores are slowly but surely cutting the small retailer's throat.

Respectfully,
A READER.

OUR NEW DEPARTURE IN ADVERTISING

THE NOVEMBER LETTER—To Progressive, Experienced, Well-Principled Grocers

TO OUR GOOD FRIENDS:—

We have been advertisers for fifty years. Magazines, Newspapers, Metal Signs, Lantern Slides, Show Cards, Circulars, Postals, Letters by Post, Fac-Simile Cards, all have had their place in our efforts to win the eye of the public.

Each method in turn loses its grip and we have had continually to say "What Next?" So, six months ago, we broke a new trail, asking a half dozen of the leading Grocery Journals of the Atlantic Slope, to publish a Monthly Illustrated Letter to the Grocer Fraternity of their Parishes. They think they reach 30,000 of the most enterprising, wideawake Merchants on the Atlantic Slope.

Our idea was to permeate our Letter with the freedom and confidence of a neighborly chat, as if we had the chance to sit leisurely down for a ten minute "chin" with each Merchant and have him talk to us of his troubles and successes and we fill in the chinks with ours. Of course only Merchants would be interested in this sort of thing and "Plungers" and "Commercial Wolves" would not follow that scent. Well, how has it worked?

1st. Not a sneer from one of them. We judge we have presented and illustrated practically, difficulties or methods, that appeal to the great mass of Merchants.

2nd. Many kindly words of approval and interest.

3rd. Some exchanges of experiences by mail which were worth while. Does it not always do a man good to see his difficulties through another fellow's eyes? We are better friends with our trade for this new and novel try in advertising, but we expect to close this Series with our Holiday Greeting in the December Journals, catch our breath and then—what?

BY THE WAY.

This is the time when the average Grocer may control a healthful and profitable distribution of Fine Cured Hams and Bacon. So much Fresh Meat is in the Market—Beef, Veal, Mutton, Lamb, Pork, now and then Bear and Venison, and Poultry (from a royal American Turkey down the list of sizes) that the smack of a well Cured and Smoked Ham or a Rasher of Delicious Bacon, comes as an alternative to all this Flavor of Fresh Meats, with a delightful whet to the appetite and the completion of a fine Ham. Every Eater likes a change! What will YOU do with November and December Trade in Hams and Bacon?

1st. Some of our friends have been inveigled into a large purchase of stock of ordinary quality and illy smoked condition. A big window display has continued until it tired everybody and ceased to be a drawing card; and then our Merchant Friend found himself still loaded with an unsalable surplus more or less hoary with age. It may have paid the Packer to unload his surplus on the Grocer, but did it pay the Grocer? Does it ever pay the Distributor to unload on his Consumers more than they want of any one article of Food? Does it not result in a reaction—a sort of pall on the appetite? Or indeed such dissatisfaction that his Buyers go elsewhere for purchases. But to stimulate the trade for what people want and are glad to use, and give them in that line what satisfies them and makes them good advertisers among their friends, why that's the Trump Card! Are we right?

What do you think of a bright, enterprising, forceful Grocer in a brisk Town of fair size who has this bee in his bonnet? He has been formerly selling three or four Brands of Hams. He says frankly, "Not one of them was ever quite good enough for me. I did not know where else to go so I cleaned out the whole business and said "I will not handle Hams. I get no money or reputation out of them."

He had heard of "THE FERRIS" and "THAT IRRESISTIBLE FLAVOR" and come to believe in them. This is outlining his plan. "I will arrange to have a weekly supply to open every Tuesday Morning, never overloading myself. My Salesmen and I will quietly and pleasantly fish for orders right at the Order Takers on the wagons, by telephone, or face to face with our patrons in the store. If we clean out we will book orders for delivery 'Tuesday Morning.' Sometimes Buyers have an added zest for Goods which they can't get right away quick. I shall make a tasty, neat display—or four Burlapped Hams and Bacon Flitches with their bright artistic Labels are quite enough for Show Purposes. I will change their place of display every week, but everlastingly and persuasively 'pump for Orders.' I shall not put a price ticket on them, but make each sale show a regular and generous profit—absolutely one price only, on every sale. There is some fun in pushing an extra fine line of Goods that always pay me a generous profit. If I run this campaign I will absolutely not touch any other Brand. It will be 'FERRIS' or nothing, for I believe in 'FERRIS.'

"I notice many Housekeepers ask for a little Ham of 8 or 9 lbs. I know enough about Pigs, Chickens and Lambs, to understand that all these dear creatures must have age and size as well as good feeding to make them tender and juicy. An 8 lb. Ham cannot satisfy these conditions; and a 14 or 15 lb. Ham is too large for the wants of many Housekeepers. I have it! I will sell 'Half a Ham' and so, out of a Ham, tender, juicy, toothsome 14 or 15 pounder, give each Housekeeper a Joint weighing about 7 pounds. There you are, just what she wants and at its finest.' I shall pay attention to details, clean tools, a knife as sharp as a razor, a saw that will walk through the Ham Bone as if it were fun, and a man who knows how to do the job. In that way I shall avoid one of the breaks on Retail Ham Business; a cent more per pound for a Half Ham where it must be had; a whole Ham sold wherever it can be used.

"Then you see there is a chance for me to do a little Advertising—not whole Pages or Half Pages in the Town's Paper, but Reading Notices, about six inches long, changed every week or two. What do you think of my new campaign?"

Well, What do YOU think of it? Can a Grocer make more money by selling fewer Goods of better Quality at a better Profit and get somewhere by the end of the year? If YOU would like to try this on, there is no charge for our Friend's Brains and enthusiasm. Is it worth while in your Case? All orders received by one o'clock can be shipped the same afternoon.

Our Prices are printed and invariable. We never sell anything but the Ferris Curings and always pack Goods fresh from our Smoke Houses. Can we thus work together till the year's end to mutual advantage?

And how do you like our NOVEMBER LETTER?

In sincerity your friends,

(Signed and Sealed as the Law directs.)

The New York Letter

Southern Cotton Oil Company Now Sues United Profit-Sharing Corporation. Great Atlantic & Pacific Tea Company Loses Again in Cream of Wheat Case. Grocery Representatives Meet to Form Plans for Legislative Campaign. Cold Storage Law to Be Enforced From Now On. Market Summary.

Special Correspondence of "Modern Merchant and Grocery World."

New York, November 12, 1915.

The appeal in the Cream of Wheat case was decided during the week in favor again of the Cream of Wheat Co., as it was felt certain it would be. Readers hereof will remember that several months ago the Great Atlantic and Pacific Tea Co. was cut off by the Cream of Wheat Co. for cutting the price of Cream of Wheat to 12 cents in its Economy stores. The Cream of Wheat Co. also made it plain to its other customers that it did not expect them to sell the tea company. The latter brought suit against the Cream of Wheat Co. on the ground that what it was doing was a violation of the Clayton Anti-Trust Act. The case was argued in the lower court and an injunction was refused, the court ruling that the Cream of Wheat Co. had done only what it had a right to do in choosing its own customers. An appeal was taken by the tea company and the United States Circuit Court of Appeals now upholds the decision of the lower court, and takes occasion to say something which has been contended by the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" for years, namely, that it was fundamental with or without any law or court decision that a private seller could choose his own customers and decline to sell, or sell, just as he liked. The decision of the Appeal Court said:—

We had supposed that it was elementary law that a trader could buy from whom he pleased and sell to whom he pleased, and that his selection of seller and buyer was wholly his own concern. It is part of a man's civil rights that he be at liberty to refuse business relations with any persons whomsoever, whether the refusal rests upon reason or is the result of whim, caprice, prejudice or malice.

Before the Sherman Act it was the law that a trader might reject the offer of a proposing buyer, for any reason that appealed to him; it might be because he did not like the other's business methods or because he had some personal difference with him politically, racial or social. That was purely his own affair; with which nobody else had any concern. Neither the Sherman Act nor any decision of the Supreme Court considering the same, nor the Clayton Act has changed the law in this particular. We have not yet reached the stage where the selection of a trader's customers is made for him by the Government.

Produce Exchange members who are familiar with the flour situation in this city now and formerly, express great concern over the present conditions.

They say that never before has there been such a small spot supply of flour here as there is now. Sometimes the spot stock amounts to 500,000 barrels, and at times it has amounted to double that. At present they say there is almost no spot supply at all, the trade being dependent upon daily receipts from the West. The cause is particularly the rains which attended the gathering of the harvest in the winter wheat States. This delayed gathering and the movement of wheat, and flour buyers worked on their old stocks instead of buying new. Now the old stocks are down to bottom and everybody is ordering. The mills say they cannot keep pace with the demand, one large Minneapolis mill being 300,000 barrels behind in its orders. The railroads are also more or less behind in shipments, and if anything should happen to tie up shipping facilities between this city and the West, it is said that a very few days would witness a literal flour famine.

A conference was held here during the week between special committees of the National Wholesale Grocers' Association and the American Specialty Manufacturers' Association for the purpose of forming plans offensive and defensive as to probable legislation, not only in Congress, but in the various State Legislatures. Those present will not give out what transpired or what plans were adopted, but a prime idea is that whatever can be done to promote uniformity of legislation will be done this winter.

The official bulletin of the National Wholesale Grocers' Association, just issued, contains a complete list of proposed net weights which have been agreed upon for various products by joint committees of the above association and of the National Canners' Association. These weights are supposed to be those which can be safely marked on labels for the purpose of complying with the net weight laws. They are calculated to include tolerances for variation. The space is not available to publish all of these weights, but any one interested can get them by addressing the secretary of the National Wholesale Grocers' Association in this city.

The State Commissioner of Foods and Markets, John J. Dillon, has announced that after November 15th he will prosecute any dealer in eggs who continues to violate the law requiring cold storage eggs to be labeled and sold cold storage eggs. This law has, up to the present time, been very generally ignored, and great abuses have resulted. The Commissioner admits that it will be very difficult to run down every case of infraction, but he is going to make an attempt, and the trade generally agree that if he can succeed it will work a considerable improvement of conditions.

The Southern Cotton Oil Co. has retaliated against the United Profit Sharing Corporation for the suit which the latter concern recently brought against it for breaking its contract to pack United Profit Sharing Coupons in salad oil. The oil company has brought a suit in New Jersey for $126,126.17 damages for breach of contract. The breach complained of is alleged to be that the United Co. failed to take over the premium stations of the United Cigar Stores, as the oil company says it agreed to do. The oil company said it was understood between the two corporations that the United Profit Sharing Corporation was to consolidate with the premium system of the United Cigar Stores. The oil company also declares that the United violated its promise not to sell its coupons to the retail trade as trading stamps.

SUMMARIZED MARKET CONDITIONS.

Tea quiet, without any particular change from a week ago.—Coffee heavy and dull. Rio 7s are maintained because they are scarce, but Santos is easier.—Sugar very much excited on account of the advancing raw market. The supply of raws is small and in the hands of firm speculators. Granulated is quiet at 6 cents.—Alaska red salmon from 2½ to 5 cents higher on account of diminishing supplies. Salmon on look is somewhat firmer on account of active export demand. Domestic salmon also firm and about 10 cents a case higher.—Tomatoes firm and shade higher. Other canned goods unchanged, except that peas appear to be a trifle firmer.—Prunes higher on the coast, although there is some cutting of prices by the smaller packers. Sugar prunes firm and unchanged. Other dried fruits unchanged, with currants very scarce and firm, although some supplies were received this week. Wheat still more or less excited and speculative, the market varying from day to day upon changing reports of weather conditions in the Northwest. Flour steady and unchanged. Supply on spot comparatively low.

Oregon Sunday-closing Law Knocked Out.

Oregon's Sunday closing law was declared invalid by the State District Court here during the week. Dan Klaher, groceryman, charged with violating the law, was found not guilty. The law was declared invalid, on the ground that it specified that certain lines of business should not be conducted on "Lord's Day," while others could be.

Weekly Window Display Suggestions

Thanksgiving Display.

Make a platform by laying boards across two boxes. Leave a space about 15 inches or so between top of platform and sides of window, in order to make sides of platform slant down to edge of window. Cover platform entirely with green crepe paper, outlining edges with twisted white crepe paper strips. Suggestions for letters of "Thanksgiving" are: Form them with loaf sugar. Another idea is to use cranberries, laying them in paste-mucilage; the easiest method is to use red cardboard letters. Items on which napkins are: Dressed turkey, two bundles of celery, various fruits and vegetables. Leave enough space between napkins to make an attractive showing. Cover the green paper beneath. Suspend bananas from ceiling of window. Finish the display with a background of green paper, topped with a lattice of strips of white and of green twisted paper.

Merchants everywhere tell our 800 salesmen that business is booming.

We have had two record crops, at big prices, with big demand at home and abroad.

We have a record mineral production.

Stocks of manufactured material are short, and labor is in great demand at high wages.

Exports largely exceed imports.

Foreign competition is less than ever.

U. S. securities are coming home.

Factories are busy, many working overtime.

More freight cars are needed, and steamers are taxed to capacity.

We have the best money in the world, more of it than ever before, with easy credits.

Hundreds of millions loaned to other nations and record-breaking importation of gold.

Such a combination of favorable circumstances never has occurred before, and probably will never occur again.

Billions of dollars are passing over the merchants' counters. The people who spend this money want the best service.

They demand it in all kinds of stores, from the smallest to the largest.

They get it in stores which use our up-to-date Cash Registers, which quicken service, stop mistakes, and increase profits.

Over a million merchants have proved our Cash Registers to be a business necessity.

Take a Hint from Economy Stores

☞ You wonder how the Economy stores can sell Coffee so cheap. One thing is, they don't buy it through salesmen. The Economy store—with which you are trying to compete—cuts out all middlemen in its buying. Hadn't you better do the same?

☞ We sell Teas and Coffees by mail, which is much cheaper for you than buying them through salesmen. If you want to know more about the plan, send us a sample to match and put a price on. There you'll have the whole thing in a nutshell.

The Grocery Markets

Tea.

The tea market shows no change for the week. Everything is steady to firm and in good condition from the standpoint of the holder. There is no surplus of tea of any variety or grade. Demand is fair and prices unchanged from a week ago.

Coffee.

The coffee market shows no change for the week. The demand is quite small and the situation rather heavy. The general tone of the market for Rio and Santos, with the possible exception of Rio No. 7s, is easier. Rio No. 7s are somewhat scarcer than the others. Mild coffees are unchanged and quieter than they have been, owing to the falling off in the export trade, due to scarce shipping facilities. Java and Mocha are unchanged and quiet.

Sugar.

The sugar market has been very much excited during the week and at this writing raws have been quoted as high as 4.95 cents, the price at which granulated sold for only a short time ago. Granulated is now quiet at 5.85 to 6.00 cents and may go higher. The cause is the scarcity of raw sugar. Refiners need raw sugar and are therefore compelled to go into the market to buy at any price at which they can get it. Almost no sugars are offered for prompt shipment from Cuba, and the available supply is mostly in the hands of New York speculators, who are squeezing the refiners at every turn. The consumptive demand for sugar is fair.

Syrup and Molasses.

Glucose is unchanged. Sugar syrup is perhaps a cent a gallon cheaper than a week ago, owing to larger supply. Molasses is unchanged and quiet. New crop reports are for a smaller production this year than last.

Canned Goods.

The statistical position of tomatoes has at last forced prices up again and very little good standard stock can be bought below 90 cents in a large way f. o. b. The demand is fair and predictions of much higher prices within a few weeks are freely made. Corn is unchanged. The entire line is firm. Peas are still heavy at ruling quotations. Apples show no change as yet, but there are those who believe that apples are good property, meaning New York State gallons at present quotations. This because the pack was smaller than usual. California canned goods are quiet from first hands and unchanged in price. Small Eastern staple canned goods show no change and quiet demand.

Fish.

There has been no change in the market for Norway mackerel, either on spot or for fall-caught fish. The spot supply is still very light and prices fully maintained. Some new-caught Norway mackerel has reached the country, but the quality has not been extra. At the very high prices there are few takers. The catch of shore mackerel has been particularly good of late, both as to quantity and quality, although this has not materially affected the market. Cod, hake and haddock are rather active at unchanged prices. Salmon is unchanged throughout and in moderate demand. Domestic sardines are higher, the keyless lowest grade goods being about 10 cents per case higher, and now quoted in a large way f. o. b. at $2.20. The pack is over and the packers are contending that the supply is small. Imported sardines are unchanged, being still scarce and high.

Beans and Peas.

Pea beans are still scarce on spot and the market in a large way rules around $3.75 per bushel. They can be bought cheaper than that to come forward. Marrows are unchanged and still maintained on the previously reported high basis. The demand is fair. California limas are high, 5½ to 5¾ cents per pound; demand fair. Green and Scotch peas show no change from a week ago.

Provisions.

Everything in the smoked meat line is steady and unchanged, including picnic, regular and skinback hams, bellies and bacon. The consumptive demand is normal for the season. Both pure and compound lard are steady at a decline of ¼ cent; demand fair. Canned meats, dried beef and barreled pork are all unchanged and quiet.

Butter.

There is an active demand for fancy fresh butter and the receipts are cleaning up on arrival at an advance of 1 cent per pound. Receipts of butter are falling off considerably and the demand continues good. The general situation is healthy and further slight advances are not unexpected.

Eggs.

The market for fresh new-laid eggs is firm at 2 cents per dozen advance. An active consumptive demand is reported, absorbing the receipts on arrival. Storage eggs are unchanged and with a fair consumptive demand.

Cheese.

The cheese market is firm and unchanged, with a good consumptive demand. There is nothing specially to report and the situation is as it was a week ago, with no important change in sight. The make is about normal for the season.

Dried Fruits.

Prunes are higher, both in the East and on the coast. On account of large export demand packers are now quoting a 5-cent basis for the four sizes, which is about 1½ cents a pound above the price ruling a comparatively short time ago. The high price which has been ruling for some time in the East is still maintained. There is no change in peaches or apricots, the latter being firm and the former being still very low. Raisins, currants and the balance of the list are unchanged and quiet.

INDIVIDUAL MARKET REPORT

Spices.

The market has been very active. Prices have been fluctuating steadily. Cable advices to-day report that the Suez Canal has been closed. This will have a tendency to greatly advance prices on many articles in the spice line.

Pepper.—The demand has been large and steady. Stocks here are limited and are narrowly held. All grades have advanced 1 to 1½ cents during the week or 10 days and indications point to still higher prices.

Cloves, as we have heretofore predicted, have greatly advanced in price. The stocks here are very scarce, and further advances may be expected.

Pimento.—Firm and little is being shipped from Jamaica, England being a large buyer at this time.

Mace.—In better demand for home spot and to arrive. There is very little in stock here.

Nutmegs.—We have had a very large and urgent demand during the last week or 10 days, and prices have been marked up 1½ to 2 cents per pound.

Cassias.—Saigon grade scarce. Ceylon is in moderate supply. Ceylon grades, in cases, are scarce and tending upward.

Paprikas.—Selling in a satisfactory way at unchanged prices. Hungarian grade out of stock.

McCORMICK & CO.

Baltimore, Md.

Imported Fish Specialties.

Holland Herrings.—Prices for commodity continue their upward course, owing to the tremendous demand in Europe, and our agents Holland report that all parcels offered by them, no matter at what price, quickly snapped up. A shipment of Holland herrings arrived by last Dutch steamer and sales are being made from this parcel at prices which have been heard of in many years. The trade, of course, is buying only in half-to-mouth lots, which is only natural owing to the extraordinarily high prices.

A good-sized parcel of new Norwegian fat fall mackerel is now arriving on the Norwegian steamer, due here shortly. Prices, of course, are much higher than those demanded last season, and it remains to be seen if the trade will take the goods readily at an advance. Those who want Norwegian mackerel for their trade will still have to pay these prices or do without it this season, as the catch this season is small.

been so small that it is sure to be austere before long. The imported sardine situation continues just as unsatisfactory as depicted in our recent reports. Nothing being added to supplies, and the small packs are going into consumption quickly, at steadily advancing prices. Fish which is eagerly looked for to be caught in Norwegian waters has not yet made its appearance as yet, but there is still hope; but there is no likelihood of any decline in prices, no matter how the catch may be just now, as demand exceeds the supply at the present time. The same may be said of French and Portuguese sardines, of which only very negligible quantities are in store here.

STROHMEYER & ARPE CO.

Standard Canned Goods.

Very now and then there is an increase in the demand for tomatoes, which causes a stronger feeling amongst canners, and an inclination to advance prices, but when the demand has been supplied the market eases off again, and the smaller packers lose courage. This has happened a number of times during the last four or five weeks, and just now the market again shows a disposition to become stronger all along the line, though buying is not as large as it has been. The small packers who have no facilities for safely carrying tomatoes in winter months are said to be pretty well up, and when they are out of the market there may be an upward movement as to prices that might extend through the winter months. At this time it looks like tomatoes can be handled with safety. The withdrawal in the next two weeks of the cheap freight rates by the rail and lake lines to those points in the West and Northwest served by them, caused an increase in the demand for tomatoes from jobbers as well as from tomato canners who are short on their contracts. It is expected that there will be further orders next week from the same sections, and additional orders from the Eastern and Southern jobbers who have been steady buyers in lots ranging from one to four or five carloads. Every order is for quick shipment, the same character of buying that prevailed during September and October, which mean a continuation of the repeat orders during this month.

The low prices for sweet potatoes continue to attract orders, even from those markets that seldom buy them, and then only in small lots. There is a good demand for low-priced corn, and a fair demand for fancy shoepeg corn, which is closely sold up. Spinach is moving out steadily and may improve as to prices. Low-priced peas sold moderately during the week, but all the other items were dull enough. The Baltimore canners are carrying into the winter season the smallest stocks of vegetables held by them in many years. The fall canning season for oysters has opened up this week with a light demand for them. It is reported that the oysters are not thriving anywhere along the Atlantic coast this season. THOS. J. A Meat Slicer That Computes

For months you've been saying to yourself, "I'll get a meat slicer some time, when somebody brings out one that suits me." That was a sensible conclusion, for a modern grocery store without a meat slicer is—but there couldn't be a modern store without it.

Here is your slicer—the Climax Computing Sanitary Slicer. A slicer that slices, weighs, computes. It's more than human—quicker and more accurate. You'd think such a slicer would be very expensive, but you'll be amazed to hear how moderate it is.

The Climax Slicer is the only one with a scale attached. You can buy it without the scale if you want.

The Climax is very strongly built and is handsomely finished in baked enamel, neatly striped, bright parts nicked.

The Climax slices Bacon, Dried Beef, Boiled or Fresh Boneless Ham, Bologna, and as the meat falls into the tray automatically registers the weight and money value at whatever price per pound the meat is sold.

The cutting is done by a steel disc knife of the very best grade, finely ground and tempered. As the wheel is turned, the knife revolving at high speed cuts easily through the meat, making a clear, even cut, at the rate of one slice for each revolution of the fly wheel.

In operating the machine the exact weight and value—no more, no less—need be cut, thereby avoiding loss by giving over-weight should a little more be cut than customer asks for, which is apt to occur when cutting by guess. There need be no "left over" slices after serving a customer with meat sliced with the Climax Computing Machine.

The meat need not be handled, because it drops into a portable tray with handle attached to it, so that the meat may be shifted from tray to wrapping paper without coming in contact with the hands.

Wholesale Packages of Tea Need Not Bear Net Weight.

Department of Agriculture Decides That for Present it Will Take the Position That Law Means Only Small Packages That Reach the Consumer.

Special Correspondence of "Modern Merchant and Grocery World."

Washington, D. C.,

November 11, 1915.

The Department of Agriculture has ruled that the net weight of tea need not be put on bulk packages or chests such as are sold to retailers. A question had arisen as to whether these should be marked as well as the package sold consumers. The letter of Dr. Alsberg, Chief of the Bureau of Chemistry, is as follows:

Regarding the necessity of branding the quantity of the contents upon bulk packages of tea, the question whether tea in the original bulk packages, as imported, constitutes food in package form within the meaning of the net weight amendment is, in the opinion of the bureau, not entirely free from doubt. Under the circumstances, for the present, no objection will be made by the bureau to the importation of tea in such packages solely upon the ground that such packages are not plainly and conspicuously marked with a statement of the quantity of the contents.

Should it finally be decided by the Department that tea in bulk packages constitutes food in package form within the meaning of the law, public notice will be given and importers afforded an opportunity to make the necessary arrangements for the appropriate marking in the countries from which the teas are imported.

At the present time the net weight of teas imported in bulk packages is not marked in the country of production, and in the opinion of the trade it would be difficult to get the exporters in China, Japan and other places to do so at short notice. For this reason it is felt that the tea merchants of this country should be informed long in advance of the attitude of the Government regarding the marketing provision so that they might educate the producers to the practice of weighing the tea chests and marking them.

HOLT.

The Week's One-Time Ads.

Well, this week the Ferris ad. gets down to brass tacks. And between you and me, I'm glad of it. I suppose the kind of ads. they've been using are all right—they must have found that they paid or they wouldn't have kept 'em up—but I've been looking for the Ferris people to say something about Ferris Hams and Bacon. When people have got such scrumptious stuff to advertise as the Ferris people have, it seems to my limited intelligence like they ought to talk about it with their mouth and both hands. The ad. this week just suits me. If you fellows can read it and not feel that Ferris Hams and Bacon are what you need to fill out your line of fancy brands, then you're pretty hard people to convince. Read the experience of the grocer who couldn't get the sort of ham he wanted, so stopped handling any ham at all. See how he feels about Ferris Hams. If you've been handling the ordinary run of packers' hams, the Ferris goods will open your eyes. Your customers' eyes, too.

Have you gentlemen read any of the ads. that the American News Co. of New York have been running in here? There's one in this week. If you don't read it, you'll be stabbing yourself in the back, for there's an idea in it that ought to mean some money. The American News Co.'s scheme is to get you to put a little table in your store with magazines and periodicals on it for sale. No clerk necessary—it tends itself. Just think of all the people that come in your store in the course of a day. Every one is a magazine reader, or could be. Doesn't it stand to reason you could sell some magazines to some of these people? There isn't any doubt about it—without investing any money to speak of, and without any extra work, the thing would grow to be a steady little feeder in a mighty little while. There are bully profits in magazines. Maybe you're one of those fellows that the Economy stores are plaguing right now. Suppose you put in the little magazine table and started that going and then get a few other little stunts that the Economy stores don't work and started them going—why in a little while you wouldn't care whether the Economy stores did business or not. I want you to think this over good and hard. And don't figure out you couldn't sell magazines; you wouldn't need to, they'd sell themselves. If they'd do that, you'd be willing to give them a little store room, wouldn't you? Why of course you would. Send in the coupon at the bottom of the ad. and get their dope anyway.

Dry Goods Business Stays Better Than Last Year.

How Women Can Save Money and Make the Grocer a Profit.

Instead of buying a quart of milk mix with her pancake flour, so cakes will be brown and tender and delicious, the housewife of to-day is lied of that expense and trouble when she buys Aunt Jemima's Pancake Buckwheat Flour.

For sweet milk in powdered form already in Aunt Jemima's and all housewife has to do is to add water to the flour.

Taking the cost of milk into account it's almost like getting a package Aunt Jemima's for nothing.

This is a wonderfully effective talk point for Aunt Jemima's now that cost of living is so high, and you find the women will respond readily you tell them about it.—Advt.

The Best Collection Scheme Yet.

Say, boys, I heard of the funniest collection stunt the other day I ever heard of in all my life. A customer of mine works it and it's all his own. And maybe it don't get across. The worst of it is, I don't suppose either you or me could work it, because we're bad actors. I know I couldn't, but anyway it's good enough to give to you. Whether you could use it or not, it's a dinged sight better than a collection agency.

This fellow does mostly a credit business. He told me not 15 per cent. of his trade is cash. Because his collection scheme works so well, he takes chances that the ordinary man would be a fool to take.

Here's what he does. He goes out to collect a bill and if he sees he ain't going to collect it, he breaks all up and cries right in the customer's face.

And he cries so good that the chance is the customer goes out and borrows money on the piano to pay him.

The first I saw of this was when my house wrote me he was behind in his account and to get a check from him for a part of it anyway.

I handed it to him just as an ordinary matter of business, and I saw him fill up right away. He took me back in his office and sat there for five minutes with his mouth all working and tears coming up in his eyes, before he could even talk. Then he started in to tell me about a lot of hard luck reasons why he hadn't been able to pay. His wife had had an operation, and his mother, who lived with 'em, had had something happen to her, and this and that, and by gee, when he got through talking, crying a little all the time, I'd made my mind up to pawn my watch and help him out. Take it from me, I'd have lost my job before I'd have pushed him. I wrote a letter to the house that night about it that the credit man told me afterward darned near brought tears to his eyes.

Some time after that I found out that the whole thing was simply a stunt. I don't mean that his story was a lie—it wasn't—but the filling up and the mouth-working was all put on. Understand, it was real. He cried all right, but the point was that all he had to do any time was to press a button or something and up came the tears and the ready-made sobs.

Great poker, but I wish I could do that! If I could do that, I'll bet I wouldn't have to go in the cellar to smoke when I'm home.

Some months after that I threw this thing at him and he fessed up that he could do it. He'd paid his bill by that time, and he told me he'd been able to do that all his life. He said to me that that stunt had done more for him than anything he'd ever done or ever had.

"Why it makes collections a cinch," he said. "I've got a customer on my books that nobody else in town will trust. She's a boarding house keeper and she uses a lot of stuff. She's not a skin, but she can't manage, and her reputation is bad. She always pays me, because I found out that she's got a heart as big as a house and all I have to do is to go there and if she starts to stand me off, I fill up and throw my hands up as if her bill was all that stood between me and the sheriff. Once it didn't work as fast as it ought to, and I had to cry out loud. Oh I can do it! She went across the street and borrowed the money from her brother to pay me."

"I do it with some other slow people and it always works. Once I did it with a man that said he had just enough to pay me or his landlord. He couldn't pay both and he had to pay his landlord the very next day or he'd put him out. I started to get in my work and I came away from there with my money in my hand. Before the end of that week his landlord had put him out. That's going some, ain't it?"

I sure agreed that it was. He told me some more cases. He simply makes people so sorry for him that they can't do a blame thing but pay him. They think when they see him fill up that something fearful's going to happen—bankruptcy or sheriff's sale or something, and it gets 'em.

All my life I've wanted something I've read about in novels. It's a "handsome, dissipated face." A handsome dissipated face is always getting across with something, especially with women. I've wanted one more than anything. I could manage one end of it, but the other would bother me some. But what I started to say was that I'd rather have that fellow's stunt even than a handsome dissipated face. Much rather—you can do more with it.

I own up I tried it once, after he told me how easy it was. I tried it at home one night. It was Saturday night, I'd just got home, and my wife wanted me to go to the movies. Well, I like the movies, when I'm in the humor for 'em, but that night it was raining and I was tired, and I didn't feel any more like going than I felt like cutting off a toe.

She put it up to me pretty strong—"hadn't been out for a week"—and I thought of my friend's stunt, and started to try to fill up. Nary fill—dry as a bone. Then I thought if I'd work my mouth maybe the tears would come, and I did that.

"I wish you wouldn't chew your cud while I'm talking to you," she said, "I don't like it."

I didn't give up right away—my wife's got a mighty tender heart, and I knew that if I could make one tear, I could stay home. I tried to fill up again and kept working my mouth and even to sob a little broken talk out, when she came over and began sniff around to see if she could smell liquor on me I give it up. I go to the movies? Sure—there wasn't anything else to it from start.

So I couldn't use the stunt, maybe you could. You'll find the greatest thing in the world you can.

Failures Continue to Decrease

Many Lines Now Below Corresponding Period of 1914, But Still Above Average of Previous Years.

In many lines of merchandise even in liquor, the report of failures for October shows a falling from October, 1914. October failures are still greater than the average for 1913, 1912 and 1911, are perceptibly reducing. The figures are as follows:—

General Stores.—October, 1915, 146; liabilities, $1,382,520; October, 1914, 166; liabilities, $1,407,290.

Grocers.—October, 1915, liabilities, $1,312,035; October, 1914, 290; liabilities, $962,305.

Clothing and furnishing.—October, 1915, 82; liabilities, $731,000; October, 1914, 121; liabilities, 310,399.

Dry Goods.—October, 1915, liabilities, $1,150,036; October, 1914, 64; liabilities, $1,474,201.

Shoes.—October, 1915, 42; liabilities, $205,407; October, 1914, 34; liabilities, $251,850.

Hardware.—October, 1915, liabilities, $339,421; October, 1914, 37; liabilities, $407,050.

The total number of store failures during the month was 1,176 in October, 1914.

Grocers Start Co-operative Baking Company in Detroit, Mich.

The organization of the Grocers Baking Co. has been perfected in Detroit, Mich. Nearly 100 retail grocers and restaurateurs have already subscribed for stock and it is expected to increase this number to 200 by January 1st. The company has purchased property at 335 Lexington avenue, formerly operated under the style of German Rye Bakery, and is already in possession. The watchwords of the corporation will be: Quality, Service, Sanitation. The company will have a full line of baked goods on the market by November 15th.

No. 337.—When a Employer Can Give a Frank Opinion as to a Former Employee.

Here is a situation which will appeal to every employer; that is why I am answering it here instead of by letter to the inquirer. The letter comes to me from a New York reader who requests that I withhold his name:—

Here is a case for you and your readers to consider together. Up to a month ago we employed a man as collector. We did not bond him, believing him perfectly honest. He collected a large amount of our accounts and had been with us for five years. His last collection was made about a month ago, and consisted of about $150. He came in at the close of the day and said he had lost it. Ordinarily we would have accepted his word, but I noticed liquor on him and I had already heard some things about his manner of living. I questioned him about the manner of his loss and his story did not seem convincing. We therefore discharged him on the spot. He applied to another house in the same line for a position and gave our name as reference. A member of the firm called at our store and asked about him, and I told him the whole story. I stated what I had learned about the young man's private life, also about noticing the liquor and the story about losing the money. I told him frankly that I suspected the young man of having stolen the money instead of losing it. As a result of what I stated, the young man did not get his position. I believe he would have gotten it if I had given him a good reference. He has now brought suit against our house, charging defamation of character and asks heavy damages. I always believed that a former employer had a right to tell his opinion of a former employee, but if there is anything in this suit, I appear to have been mistaken.

You are not mistaken, and in my judgment there is nothing in the suit. The only chance your former employee has of getting damages from you is to prove that in what you said you were actuated by malice. You know whether you were or not. If he can prove that, he may have a chance. Let me explain.

Ordinarily one man may not say scandalous things about another, even if they are true. If they are not true, they always give cause for a civil damage suit, and even if they are true, the law holds that they tend to a breach of the peace, and makes the person uttering them criminally liable.

But there are certain exceptions to this rule, called privileged communications. One of these is just the sort of communication described in the above letter—that made where a former employer, when asked for a reference as to a former employee, expresses his opinion about him. Even if what he says would ordinarily be slanderous, and—if he acts in good faith—even if what he says is not true, the employer is protected and no action can successfully be brought against him for slander or libel.

In such a case the employer can even go further than telling merely what he knows about his former employee. He can tell what he has heard, even though he has not investigated it, and does not know it to be true. Even if these rumors which he repeats prove to be completely unfounded and untrue, the employer is not liable for repeating them—if he acts without malice and in good faith.

The legal reason for permitting the employer so much latitude is that an employer who is about to hire somebody is entitled, as a sort of social obligation, to have all the information he can get about that person. As a leading case puts it:

Giving information as to the character and capabilities of a former employee is not a legal obligation enforced by law, but the law recognizes its existence as a social obligation which cannot be performed unless it creates a privileged occasion. When inquiry is made of a person as to the character and capabilities of a former employee, the person to whom the inquiry is addressed would not do his whole duty if he should confine his answer to facts which he knows of his own knowledge. Nor would he do his whole duty if he should confine himself to giving information which he has fully investigated. Indeed, he would fail in doing his full duty if he should omit to impart any material information which has come to him, even if he has not attempted to investigate it at all. He must be careful, however, to state that he is giving it as information, and not as fact, because if he gives it as fact and it proves to be untrue, he is liable.

But woe betide the employer who allows dislike, or hatred, or resentment to color his report about a former employee. The law is always severe with such, and these cases are not infrequent. Especially where an employee has left against his employer's will, or after a quarrel, he is apt to try to get back when asked by a prospective employer for a reference. Even though what he says would have been completely protected as a privileged communication, had the not been evidence of malice, the employee reflected upon can collect damages from him if the statements turn out to be untrue, and if malice can be shown to have been present.

Of course the $150 "lost" by the employee will never be recovered. To the employer it is indeed lost, but it would not have been, I cannot refrain from saying, had the collector been put under bonds, all employees handling money should be.

(Copyright, November, 1915, by Elton J. Buckley.)

NOTE.—Requests for information from this department should tersely set in full all the facts bearing on the case.

Possible Cases Under New Pennsylvania Workmen's Compensation Act

Becomes Operative Next January 1st, and Makes all Retail Merchants Within the State Liable for Accidents to Their Employees While Latter are at Work.

[Inasmuch as the new Pennsylvania Workmen's Compensation Law, which becomes operative next January 1st, affects every grocer and general storekeeper within the State, the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" will publish from time to time some possible cases which may arise under it, in the experience of the average grocer or general storekeeper. A full digest of the act was published in the issue of July 26th last. Readers hereof will remember that it practically makes it compulsory for employers to pay damages to employees who meet with accidents in the course of their regular work.—Ed.]

Possible Case No. 8.

John Smith is a retail grocer with four clerks. He pays no attention to the Workmen's Compensation Act, in fact has no clear idea that such a law has been passed and what it contains. Sometime after January 1, 1916, when the act becomes operative, one of Smith's clerks, Edward Brown, while grinding meat for hamburger steak, mislays the wooden plunger with which the pieces of meat are pushed down into the hopper. Being in a hurry, he uses his fingers and they are caught and crushed.

Smith has not accepted the provisions of workmen's compensation, and he therefore refuses to give Brown anything as the result of his accident. Brown begins suit and Smith gets a lawyer and defends.

At the trial Smith starts to tell the accident was caused by Brown's own carelessness, a defense which would have been perfectly good before the new act went into effect. He is stopped by the judge, however, who reminds him that the defense of contributory negligence can no longer be raised as a defense when an employer is sued by an injured employee. Smith having no other defense, is beaten and a heavy verdict is rendered against him. Under the instruction of the court this verdict he must pay at once. Had he accepted the provisions of the act he could have paid the damages in weekly installments, but that does not apply to a verdict given after suit.

all questions should be carefully read to avoid misconstruction. Write one side of the sheet only. Letters should be received at this office not later than Tuesday of each week, to ensure an answer in the Monday's issue following. The signature and address of the writer must accompany all inquiries, and will be published unless there is a request not to do so. All inquiries received will be answered without charge. Address all communications to Legal Editor "Modern Merchant and Grocery World."

Pennsylvania Organization Notes.

There will be an all-day district convention of Erie County merchants at Pottstown on November 30th. An attendance of 500 is expected. It will be held under the direction of the Erie Commercial Club. Good speakers have been engaged and the programme as arranged covers a wide field of discussion.

The Executive Committee of the Retail Merchants' Association and directors of the Retailers' Mutual Insurance Co. will meet at Erie on November 29th. Plans will be made for an active campaign of organization.

A meeting of the City Planning Association of Pittston will be held on November 18th.

Mr. Smedley was the guest of the St. Pottstown Association on Monday, November 19th. This active association has secured new quarters and the meeting was held in them. There was a splendid dance and a lot of interesting matters were discussed. After the meeting a splendid luncheon was served at a nearby restaurant. Following Mr. Smedley's address various members made short talks on trade and town matters. President Boon and Secretary Sumner are live wires and good leaders. This association engineered a large successful celebration, which was a treat to the town. Other important matters are in contemplation.

Mr. Smedley addressed the Miners' Association on November 3d. There was a large attendance. This organization is after the itinerant ven-ue with a sharp stick. Many important matters have been effected since organization. Minersville is a wideawake town with wideawake merchants. Presidents Jacobs and Secretary Jones are live wires. A big dollar day is planned and a campaign of publicity on "Homecoming" has been decided upon. New members are being admitted at each meeting and prospects for future activity are bright. After the addresses a splendid lunch was served and a social hour enjoyed.

The Ashland Association is growing. It now meets in a splendid, well lighted hall. Has a paid secretary. Is taking an active interest in civic matters and has already effected many reforms. The scope of the association is broad and embraces both civic and mercantile matters. It has a good credit and correction system. It has inaugurated special trade extension days and is strictly on the job.

The meeting on November 4th was a good one. Organizer Smedley was present and made an address, after which a splendid buffet luncheon was served.

Mr. Smedley was the guest of the Pottstown Association on Friday, November 5th. This association has taken a big stride forward. Heretofore it has been meeting in a public hall; it has now secured a splendid suite of three large rooms in the Security Building, these have been well furnished and splendidly decorated and they were opened for the first time on the occasion of this meeting. It was in the nature of a house warming. Over 100 of the members were in attendance, and after an inspection of the rooms, President McCaslin called the meeting to order and the routine business being disposed of, Mr. Smedley was introduced, and he made an address. Following this the president called upon various members for short addresses. Samuel Miller, Pottstown's oldest merchant, made an impressive talk. Ellis Mills, Postmaster Root, ex-President J. Allen Brandt and William P. Young were among the other speakers. At the conclusion of the programme of speeches the guests retired to the dining room, where a bounteous lunch had been provided.

Pottstown is doing things and the spirit of organization is highly developed, and co-operation is the keynote.

Pottstown grocers will organize as a group of the Pottstown Association, working in harmony with that body, but having direct charge of grocery trade interests.

During the past week Mr. Smedley addressed the associations at Indiana, Kittanning and Latrobe.

D. M. Barrett, editor of "Salesmanship," delivered an address on "The Man of the Hour" at a luncheon of the Reading Chamber of Commerce on November 5th.

The Commissioners of the Workmen's Compensation Department of the State were guests of the Johnstown Merchants' Credit Bureau on November 15th. A banquet celebrated the event.

Mr. Smedley has been invited to visit Connellsville.

Port Allegany Association is planning a big banquet, likewise Titusville.

she carries an apron full of the fruit. Rosie says that "an apple a day keeps the doctor away." In connection with "Apple Day," which was October 19th, throughout the West apples were served on that day by hotels, restaurants, on trains and elsewhere. Many thousands of boxes of the fruit were purchased by individuals or corporations and sent as gifts to hospitals, orphan asylums, etc. An interesting feature of the campaign was the fact that these apples are sold in boxes, regardless of weight, by the number of apples in a box. This number is stenciled on the box at the time it is packed, and the original package is delivered to the consumer. A box contains from 7 to 10 dozen apples.

The Science of Retail Advertising

The Gettysburg (Pa.) Department Store send in a copy of the "Gettysburg Times" of October 6th last in which they have a large advertisement (17 inches across three columns) advertising some special offerings for "Farmers' Day." There is no explanation in the paper of what Farmers' Day is, but I assume that it is a day appointed to make a special push to get farmers to come to town. The advertisement I refer to, much reduced in size, appears elsewhere on this page.

Looking over the paper, which by the way, is not a very cleanly printed sheet, I see that several of the other local merchants are also making special offerings for Farmers' Day. There is also an advertisement of Farmers' Day itself. There is a football game, a tumbling and balancing show on the street, a parade in the afternoon and band concerts morning and afternoon by four bands. I don't know whether the Gettysburg people found that they had made the same mistake as some other friends of mine did who worked a similar plan to get the country people in on a certain day—they provided so many attractions that the farmers couldn't be pulled away from them to buy goods. I always thought a good scheme for these Farmers' Days to be to have a first-class attraction say at 12 o'clock, so as to get them in by that time, and then nothing until say 4, so the intervening time can be spent in the stores.

This advertisement ought to have gotten some people in. I think I would have given chief prominence in it to the demonstrations of various things—farmers' wives are particularly keen about such things. They will see the premium offerings even if in small type.

There are a lot of typographical errors in this advertisement. A sloppily printed paper full of errors is a perfectly loathsome thing to me. A country printer may not be able to turn out a perfectly printed paper, but he can certainly eliminate the typographical errors. There is no excuse for spelling canvass gloves "canvass," or spelling demonstration—"demonstration." "ponud" for pound. All these come from sloppy and inexcusable carelessness on the printer's part. Merchants who advertise in a paper like this ought to refuse to pay for their advertisements if they contain even one typographical error. Because the average reader, seeing foolish blunders like these I have pointed out, forgets that the fault is really the publisher's, and connects it right away with the advertiser. My suggestion is that the Gettysburg Department Store send this criticism to the publisher of the "Times," that he may see how the paper impresses an impartial reader.

This Farmers' Day stunt is a good advertising idea, and I commend it to the retailers of other towns. It is peculiarly adapted to small towns situated in the midst of agricultural districts, especially those where mail-order concerns have got their work in. My experience is that this scheme can't fail to succeed in business if properly worked.

NOTE.—This department is devoted to the criticism of advertising matter, to the devising of new advertising ideas for special occasions, upon request, and to the suggesting of original advertisements when data is supplied. Communications sent for this Department should be addressed to the Editor of Science of Advertising. They will be taken up in strict rotation.

Creditors' Indifference in Bankruptcy Cases.

The National Credit Men's Association has for some time been carrying on correspondence with referees in bankruptcy in every section and in order to get their opinions on needed changes in bankruptcy legislation. Many of the referees belong to the high type of man, excellent lawyers whose opinions are well worth pointing in any contemplated bankruptcy amendments. Replies, in fact, so numerous that it would seem as if there were an agreement among them, have been the effect that the fundamental fault in administration is the absence of interest on the part of the referees, an old point with the National Association of Credit Men, but firmly and strengthened by the testimony of these referees.

Burk's Fresh Sausage

Composed entirely of selected tender pieces of pork, not the ordinary trimmings commonly used. Not cheapened in price and quality by the addition of tripe, boiled rice and sundry substitutes. Correctly seasoned, not offensive to sensitive stomachs because of pungent herbs. Nutritious. In four styles—hashed fine and coarse, linked and in straight casings.

Burk's Philadelphia Scrapple

Prepared from the very best materials—good, wholesome meats and extra fine corn meal. Well boiled and seasoned to suit the most critical. Not to be compared with some cheap products of doubtful hues and colors. Burk's eats as good as it looks. Superior to farmers' products. In pans of 15 pounds each.

Burk's Pig Souse

is a seasonable specialty prepared fresh daily, in pans of five pounds each. The jelly is clear and transparent and free from vegetable gelatines and ill-smelling glue stock. Contains plenty of meat and garnished with slices of lemon and parsley.

Proves attractive when turned out of the pan, and is a quick seller, saving the consumer the trouble of cooking pig's feet, so difficult to obtain at this season of the year.

Burk's Liver Pudding

Of the usual "Burk" standard—clean and unadulterated. Rich in quality and an excellent dish when fried, or, after removing the casing, hashed with potatoes. In rings of 1 pound each.

I have on hand a complete hollow wire, low pressure Best Lighting System, which I offer for sale at a low price, $15, less than one-half the cost when new from factory; cost $45. There are in this system three center ceiling lights of 100-candle power each, and besides these there are two small wall bracket lamps for show window or any wall, each 100-candle power, together with enough wire for a 65 to 75-foot room, all the necessary attachments and a 10-gallon tank. This system was only used about two years and is in good working condition; guaranteed to be so or no sale. Catalogue for installing and operating will be furnished with outfit; any one, with the aid of an ordinary plumber, can easily install this system. Reason for not using this outfit is we have gas and electricity installed.
